BERGHUIS V. SMITH

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

BERGHUIS, WARDEN v. SMITH

certiorari to the united states court of appeals for the sixth circuit

No. 08-1402. Argued January 20, 2010—Decided March 30, 2010

Criminal defendants have a Sixth Amendment right to trial by an impartial jury drawn from a fair cross section of the community. See Taylor v. Louisiana , 419

U. S. 522 . To establish a prima facie violation of the fair-cross-section requirement, a defendant must prove that: (1) a group qualifying as distinctive (2) is not fairly and reasonably represented in jury venires, and (3) systematic exclusion in the jury-selection process accounts for the underrepresentation. Duren v. Missouri , 439 U. S. 357 , 364.

At voir dire in the Kent County Circuit Court trial of respondent Smith, an African-American, the venire panel included between 60 and 100 individuals, only 3 of whom, at most, were African-American. At that time, African-Americans constituted 7.28% of the Countys jury-eligible population, and 6% of the pool from which potential jurors were drawn. The court rejected Smiths objection to the panels racial composition, an all-white jury convicted him of second-degree murder and felony firearm possession, and the court sentenced him to life in prison with the possibility of parole.

On order of the Michigan Court of Appeals, the trial court conducted an evidentiary hearing on Smiths fair-cross-section claim. The evidence at the hearing showed, inter alia, that under the juror-assignment order in effect when Smiths jury was empaneled, the County assigned prospective jurors first to local district courts, and, only after filling local needs, made remaining persons available to the countywide Circuit Court, which heard felony cases like Smiths. Smith calls this procedure siphoning. The month after Smiths voir dire , however, the County reversed course and adopted a Circuit-Court-first assignment order. It did so based on the belief that the district courts took most of the minority jurors, leaving the Circuit Court with a jury pool that did not represent the entire County. The trial court noted two means of measuring the underrepresentation of African-Americans on Circuit Court venires. First, the court described the absolute disparity test, under which the percentage of African-Americans in the jury pool (6%) is subtracted from the percentage of African-Americans in the local, jury-eligible population (7.28%). According to this measure, African-Americans were underrepresented by 1.28%. Next, the court set out the comparative disparity test, under which the absolute disparity (1.28%) is divided by the percentage of African-Americans in the jury-eligible population (7.28%). The quotient (18%) indicated that, on average, African-Americans were 18% less likely, when compared to the overall jury-eligible population, to be on the jury-service list. In the 11 months after Kent County discontinued the district-court-first assignment policy, the comparative disparity, on average, dropped from 18% to 15.1%. The hearing convinced the trial court that African-Americans were underrepresented on Circuit Court venires. But Smith's evidence, the trial court held, was insufficient to prove that the juror-assignment order, or any other part of the jury-selection process, had systematically excluded African-Americans. The court therefore rejected Smith's fair-cross-section claim.

The state intermediate appellate court reversed and ordered a new trial with jurors selected under the Circuit-Court-first assignment order. Reversing in turn, the Michigan Supreme Court concluded that Smith had not established a prima facie Sixth Amendment violation. This Court, the state High Court observed, has specified no preferred method for measuring whether representation of a distinctive group in the jury pool is fair and reasonable. The court noted that lower federal courts had applied three tests: the absolute and comparative disparity tests and a standard deviation test. Adopting a case-by-case approach allowing consideration of all three means of measuring underrepresentation, the court found that Smith had failed to establish a legally significant disparity under any measurement. Nevertheless giving Smith the benefit of the doubt on underrepresentation, the court determined that he had not shown systematic exclusion.

Smith then filed a federal habeas petition. The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA) prohibits federal habeas relief unless the state courts' adjudication resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, 28 U. S. C. 2254(d)(1), or resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding, 2254(d)(2). Finding no infirmity in the Michigan Supreme Court's decision when assessed under AEDPA's standards, the District Court dismissed Smith's petition. The Sixth Circuit reversed. The Court of Appeals ruled, first, that courts should use the comparative disparity test to measure underrepresentation where, as here, the allegedly excluded group is small. The court then held that Smith's comparative disparity statistics demonstrated that African-Americans representation in County Circuit Court venires was unfair and unreasonable. It next stated that Smith had shown systematic exclusion. In accord with the Michigan intermediate appellate court, the Sixth Circuit believed that the district-court-first assignment order significantly reduced the number of African-Americans available for Circuit Court venires. Smith was entitled to relief, the Sixth Circuit concluded, because no important state interest supported the district-court-first allocation system.

Held: The Sixth Circuit erred in ruling that the Michigan Supreme Court's decision involv[ed] an unreasonable application o[f] clearly established Federal law, 2254(d)(1). Duren hardly establishes-no less clearly so-that Smith was denied his Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury drawn from a fair cross section of the community. Pp. 10-16.

(a) The Duren defendant readily met all three parts of the Court's prima facie test when he complained of the dearth of women in a county's jury pool. First, he showed that women in the county were both numerous and distinct from men. 439 U. S., at 364. Second, to establish underrepresentation, he proved that women were 54% of the jury-eligible population, but accounted for only 26.7% of those summoned for jury service, and only 14.5% of those on the postsummons weekly venires from which jurors were drawn. Id., at 364-366. Finally, to show the systematic cause of the underrepresentation, he pointed to Missouri's law permitting any woman to opt out of jury service and to the manner in which the county administered that law. This Court noted that appropriately tailored hardship exemptions would likely survive a fair-cross-section challenge if justified by an important state interest, id., at 370, but concluded that no such interest could justify the exemption for each and every woman, id., at 369-370. Pp. 10-11.

(b) Neither Duren nor any other decision of this Court specifies the method or test courts must use to measure underrepresentation. Each of the three methods employed or identified by the courts below-absolute disparity, comparative disparity, and standard deviation-is imperfect. Absolute disparity and comparative disparity measurements can be misleading where, as here, members of the distinctive group compose only a small percentage of the communitys jury-eligible population. And it appears that no court has relied exclusively on a standard deviation analysis. Even absent AEDPAs constraint, this Court would have no cause to take sides here on the appropriate method or methods for measuring underrepresentation. Although the Michigan Supreme Court concluded that Smiths statistical evidence failed to establish a legally significant disparity under either the absolute or comparative disparity tests, the court nevertheless gave Smith the benefit of the doubt on underrepresentation in order to reach the issue ultimately dispositive in Duren : To the extent underrepresentation existed, was it due to systematic exclusion? See Duren , 439 U. S., at 364. Pp. 11-13.

(c) Smiths evidence gave the Michigan Supreme Court little reason to conclude that the district-court-first assignment order had any significant effect on the representation of African-Americans on Circuit Court venires. Although the record established that some County officials believed that the assignment order created racial disparities, and the County reversed the order in response, the belief was not substantiated by Smiths evidence. He introduced no evidence that African-Americans were underrepresented on the Circuit Courts venires in significantly higher percentages than on the District Court for Grand Rapids, which had the Countys largest African-American population. He did not address whether Grand Rapids had more need for jurors per capita than any other district in Kent County. And he did not compare the African-American representation levels on Circuit Court venires with those on the Federal District Court venires for the same region. See Duren , 439 U. S., at 367, n. 25. Smiths best evidence of systematic exclusion was the decline in comparative underrepresentation, from 18 to 15.1%, after Kent County reversed its assignment order. But that evidence indicated no large change and was, in any event, insufficient to prove that the original assignment order had a significantly adverse impact on the representation of African-Americans on Circuit Court venires. Pp. 13-14.

(d) In addition to renewing his siphoning argument, Smith urges that a laundry list of factors- e.g., the Countys practice of excusing prospective jurors without adequate proof of alleged hardship, and the refusal of County police to enforce orders for prospective jurors to appear-combined to reduce systematically the number of African-Americans appearing on jury lists. No clearly established precedent of this Court supports Smith's claim. Smith urges that one sentence in Duren, 439 U. S., at 368-369, places the burden of proving causation on the State. But Smith clipped that sentence from its context: The sentence does not concern the demonstration of a prima facie case; instead, it speaks to what the State might show to rebut the defendant's prima facie case. The Michigan Supreme Court was therefore far from unreasonable, 2254(d)(1), in concluding that Duren first and foremost required Smith himself to show that the underrepresentation complained of was due to systematic exclusion. This Court, furthermore, has never clearly established that jury-selection-process features of the kind on Smith's list can give rise to a fair-cross-section claim. Rather, the Taylor Court recognized broad discretion in the States to prescribe relevant qualifications for their jurors and to provide reasonable exemptions. 419 U. S., at 537-538. And in Duren, the Court understood that hardship exemptions resembling those Smith assails might well survive a fair-cross-section challenge. 439 U. S., at 370. Pp. 14-16.

Ginsburg, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court. Thomas, J., filed a concurring opinion.

OPINION OF THE COURT

BERGHUIS V. SMITH

559 U. S. ____ (2010)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

NO. 08-1402

MARY BERGHUIS, WARDEN, PETITIONER v. DIAPOLIS SMITH

on writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

[March 30, 2010]

Justice Ginsburg delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Sixth Amendment secures to criminal defendants the right to be tried by an impartial jury drawn from sources reflecting a fair cross section of the community. See Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U. S. 522 (1975). The question presented in this case is whether that right was accorded to respondent Diapolis Smith, an African-American convicted of second-degree murder by an all-white jury in Kent County, Michigan in 1993. At the time of Smith's trial, African-Americans constituted 7.28% of Kent County's jury-eligible population, and 6% of the pool from which potential jurors were drawn.

In Duren v. Missouri, 439 U. S. 357 (1979), this Court described three showings a criminal defendant must make to establish a prima facie violation of the Sixth Amendment's fair-cross-section requirement. He or she must show: (1) that the group alleged to be excluded is a distinctive group in the community; (2) that the representation of this group in venires from which juries are selected is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such persons in the community; and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury-selection process. Id., at 364. The first showing is, in most cases, easily made; the second and third are more likely to generate controversy.

The defendant in Duren readily met all three measures. He complained of the dearth of women in the Jackson County, Missouri, jury pool. To establish underrepresentation, he proved that women were 54% of the jury-eligible population, but accounted for only 26.7% of the persons summoned for jury service, and only 14.5% of the persons on the postsummons weekly venires from which jurors were drawn. To show the systematic cause of the underrepresentation, Duren pointed to Missouri's law exempting women from jury service, and to the manner in which Jackson County administered the exemption. Concluding that no significant state interest could justify Missouri's explicitly gender-based exemption, this Court held the law, as implemented in Jackson County, violative of the Sixth Amendments fair-cross-section requirement.

We here review the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit holding that Smith satisf[ie]d the prima facie test established by Duren , and granting him habeas corpus relief, i.e., release from imprisonment absent a new trial commenced within 180 days of the Court of Appeals order. 543 F. 3d 326, 336 (2008). Despite marked differences between Smiths case and Durens, and a cogent Michigan Supreme Court decision holding that Smith ha[d] not shown systematic exclusion, People v. Smith , 463 Mich. 199, 205, 615 N. W. 2d 1, 3 (2000), the Sixth Circuit found the matter settled. Cognizant of the restrictions Congress placed on federal habeas review of state-court convictions, the Court of Appeals considered that a decision contrary to its own would involv[e] an unreasonable application o[f] clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, 28 U. S. C. 2254(d)(1). 543 F. 3d, at 335.

The Sixth Circuit erred in so ruling. No decision of this Court clearly establishe[s] Smiths entitlement to federal-court relief. According to the Sixth Circuit, Smith had demonstrated that a Kent County prospective-juror-assignment procedure, which Smith calls siphoning, systematic[ally] exclu[ded] African-Americans. Under this procedure, Kent County assigned prospective jurors first to local district courts, and, only after filling local needs, made remaining persons available to the countywide Circuit Court, which heard felony cases like Smiths. The Michigan Supreme Court, however, had rejected Smiths siphoning plea for lack of proof that the assignment procedure caused underrepresentation. Smith , 463 Mich., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. As that determination was not at all unreasonable, the Sixth Circuit had no warrant to disturb it. See 2254(d)(2).

In addition to renewal of his siphoning argument, Smith here urges that a host of factors combined to reduce systematically the number of African-Americans appearing on Kent County jury lists, for example, the Kent County courts practice of excusing people without adequate proof of alleged hardship, and the refusal of Kent County police to enforce orders for prospective jurors to appear. Brief for Respondent 53-54. Our decisions do not address factors of the kind Smith urges. We have cautioned, however, that [t]he fair-cross-section principle must have much leeway in application. Taylor , 419 U. S., at 537-538; see id., at 537 (Courts holding that Sixth Amendment is violated by systematic exclusion of women from jury service does not augur or authorize the fashioning of detailed jury-selection codes by federal courts.).

A

On November 7, 1991, Christopher Rumbley was shot and killed during a bar brawl in Grand Rapids, Michigan. The bar was crowded at the time of the brawl, with 200-to-300 people on the premises. All patrons of the bar were African-American. The State charged Smith with the murder in Kent County Circuit Court.

Voir dire for Smiths trial took place in September 1993. The venire panel included between 60 and 100 individuals. The parties agree that, at most, three venire members were African-American. Smith unsuccessfully objected to the composition of the venire panel.

Smiths case proceeded to trial before an all-white jury. The case for the prosecution turned on the identity of the man who shot Rumbley. Thirty-seven witnesses from the bar, including Smith, testified at the trial. Of those, two testified that Smith fired the gun. Five testified that the shooter was not Smith, and the remainder made no identifications of the shooter. The jury convicted Smith of second-degree murder and possession of a firearm during a felony, and the court sentenced him to life imprisonment with the possibility of parole.

On first appeal, the Michigan Court of Appeals ordered the trial court to conduct an evidentiary hearing on Smiths fair-cross-section claim. The hearing occurred in early 1998. Smiths evidence showed that Grand Rapids, the largest city in Kent County, was home to roughly 37% of Kent Countys population, and to 85% of its African-American residents. Felony charges in Kent County were tried in a sole Circuit Court. Misdemeanors were prosecuted in 12 district courts, each covering a discrete geographical area. To fill the courts venires, Kent County sent questionnaires to prospective jurors. The Circuit Court Administrator testified that about 5% of the forms were returned as undeliverable, and another 15 to 20% were not answered. App. 13a. From the pool of prospective jurors who completed questionnaires, the County granted requests for hardship exemptions, e.g., for lack of transportation or child care. Id., at 21a. Kent County then assigned nonexempt prospective jurors to their local district courts venires. After filling the district courts needs, the County assigned the remaining prospective jurors to the Circuit Courts panels. Id., at 20a, 22a.

The month after voir dire for Smiths trial, Kent County reversed the assignment order. It did so, according to the Circuit Court Administrator, based on [t]he belief that the respective districts essentially swallowed up most of the minority jurors, leaving the Circuit Court with a jury pool that did not represent the entire county. Id., at 22a. The Jury Minority Representation Committee, its co-chair testified, held the same view concerning the impact of choosing district court jurors first and not returning unused persons to the pool available for Circuit Court selections. Id., at 64a-65a.

The trial court considered two means of measuring the extent of underrepresentation of African-Americans on Circuit Court venires: absolute disparity and comparative disparity. Absolute disparity is determined by subtracting the percentage of African-Americans in the jury pool (here, 6% in the six months leading up to Smiths trial) from the percentage of African-Americans in the local, jury-eligible population (here, 7.28%). By an absolute disparity measure, therefore, African-Americans were underrepresented by 1.28%. Comparative disparity is determined by dividing the absolute disparity (here, 1.28%) by the groups representation in the jury-eligible population (here, 7.28%). The quotient (here, 18%), showed that, in the six months prior to Smiths trial, African-Americans were, on average, 18% less likely, when compared to the overall jury-eligible population, to be on the jury-service list. App. to Pet. for Cert. 215a.

Isolating the month Smiths jury was selected, Smiths statistics expert estimated that the comparative disparity was 34.8%. App. 181a. In the 11 months after Kent County discontinued the district-court-first assignment policy, the comparative disparity, on average, dropped from 18% to 15.1%. Id., at 102a-103a, 113a.

Smith also introduced the testimony of an expert in demographics and economics, who tied the underrepresentation to social and economic factors. In Kent County, the expert explained, these forces made African-Americans less likely than whites to receive or return juror-eligibility questionnaires, and more likely to assert a hardship excuse. Id., at 79a-80a.

The hearing convinced the trial court that African-Americans were underrepresented in Circuit Court venues. App. to Pet. for Cert. 210a. But Smiths evidence was insufficient, that court held, to prove that the juror-assignment order, or any other part of the jury-selection process, had systematically excluded African-Americans. Id., at 210a-212a. The court therefore rejected Smiths fair-cross-section claim.

C

The Michigan Court of Appeals concluded that the juror-allocation system in place at the relevant time did result in the underrepresentation of African-Americans. Id., at 182a-183a. Reversing the trial courts judgment, the intermediate appellate court ordered a new trial, with jurors selected under the Circuit-Court-first assignment order installed shortly after the voir dire in Smiths case. Ibid. ; see supra, at 5.

The Michigan Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the Court of Appeals judgment, concluding that Smith ha[d] not established a prima facie violation of the Sixth Amendment fair-cross-section requirement. Smith , 463 Mich., at 207, 615 N. W. 2d, at 4. The Michigan High Court observed, first, that this Court has specified [no] preferred method for measuring whether representation of a distinctive group in the jury pool is fair and reasonable. Id., at 203, 615 N. W. 2d, at 2. The court then noted that lower federal courts had applied three different methods to measure fair and reasonable representation: the absolute and comparative disparity tests, described supra, at 5, and the standard deviation test.[Footnote 1]

Recognizing that no single test was entirely satisfactory, the Michigan Supreme Court adopted a case-by-case approach allowing consideration of all three means of measuring underrepresentation. Smith , 463 Mich., at 204, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. Smith's statistical evidence, the court found, failed to establish a legally significant disparity under either the absolute or comparative disparity tests. Id., at 204-205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. (The parties had presented no expert testimony regarding application of the standard deviation test. Id., at 204, n. 1, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3, n. 1; supra, at 5-6.)

Nevertheless grant[ing] [Smith] the benefit of the doubt on unfair and unreasonable underrepresentation, the Michigan Supreme Court ultimately determined that he ha[d] not shown systematic exclusion. Smith , 463 Mich., at 203, 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 2, 3. Smith's evidence, the court said, did not show how the alleged siphoning of African American jurors to district courts affected the circuit court jury pool. Id., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. In particular, the court observed, [t]he record does not disclose whether the district court jury pools contained more, fewer, or approximately the same percentage of minority jurors as the circuit court jury pool. Ibid. The court also ruled that the influence of social and economic factors on juror participation does not demonstrate a systematic exclusion. Id., at 206, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3.

In February 2003, Smith filed a habeas corpus petition in the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, reasserting his fair-cross-section claim. Because Smith is in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court, the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA), 2254, governed the District Courts review of his application for federal habeas corpus relief. Under the controlling provision of AEDPA, codified in 2254(d), a state prisoners application may not be granted as to any claim adjudicated in State court unless the state courts adjudication

(1) resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; or

(2) resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding.

Applying these standards, the District Court dismissed Smiths habeas petition. App. to Pet. for Cert. 40a-42a.

The Court of Appeals reversed. Where, as here, the allegedly excluded group is small, the Sixth Circuit ruled, courts should use the comparative disparity test to measure underrepresentation. 543 F. 3d, at 338. In that courts view, Smiths comparative disparity statistics sufficed to demonstrate that the representation of African American veniremen in Kent County was unfair and unreasonable. Ibid. As to systematic exclusion, the Sixth Circuit, in accord with the Michigan intermediate appellate court, believed that the juror-assignment order in effect when Smiths jury was empaneled significantly reduced the number of African-Americans available for Circuit Court venires. Id., at 342. Smith was entitled to relief, the court concluded, because no important state interest supported that allocation system. Id., at 345.[Footnote 2]

The State petitioned for certiorari attacking the Sixth Circuits decision on two principal grounds: First, the State charged that the federal appellate court erred in adopting the comparative disparity test to determine whether a distinctive group was underrepresented in the jury pool. Pet. for Cert. ii. Second, the State urged that, in any event, there was no systematic exclusion of African Americans from juries in Kent County, Michigan, id. ., at 25, and no warrant for the Sixth Circuits contrary determination.[Footnote 3] We granted review, 557 U. S. ____ (2009), and now reverse the Sixth Circuits judgment.

According to the Sixth Circuit, the Michigan Supreme Courts rejection of Smiths Sixth Amendment plea involved an unreasonable application o[f] clearly established Federal law, as determined by [this Court in Duren]. 2254(d)(1); see 543 F. 3d, at 345. We disagree. As explained below, our Duren decision hardly establishes-no less clearly so-that Smith was denied his Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury drawn from a fair cross section of the community.

To establish a prima facie violation of the fair-cross-section requirement, this Courts pathmarking decision in Duren instructs, a defendant must prove that: (1) a group qualifying as distinctive (2) is not fairly and reasonably represented in jury venires, and (3) systematic exclusion in the jury-selection process accounts for the underrepresentation. 439 U. S., at 364; see supra, at 1-2.

The defendant in Duren successfully challenged Jackson Countys administration of a Missouri exemption permitting any woman to opt out of jury service. 439 U. S., at 360. The Court explained why it was plain that defendant Duren had established a prima facie case. First, women in Jackson County were both numerous and distinct from men. Id., at 364 (quoting Taylor , 419 U. S., at 531). Second, Durens statistical presentation showed gross underrepresentation: Women were over half the jury-eligible population; in stark contrast, they accounted for less than 15% of jury venires. 439 U. S. , at 364-366.

Duren also demonstrated systematic exclusion with particularity. He proved that womens underrepresentation was persistent-occurring in every weekly venire for almost a year-and he identified the two stages of the jury-selection process when the systematic exclusion took place. Id., at 366. First, questionnaires for prospective jurors stated conspicuously that women could opt out of jury service. Less than 30% of those summoned were female, suggesting that women in large numbers claimed the exemption at the questionnaire stage. Ibid. Moreover, at the summons stage women were given another opportunity to [opt out]. Id., at 366-367. And if a woman ignored the summons, she was deemed to have opted out; no further inquiry was made. Id., at 367. At this final, venire, stage, womens representation plummeted to 14.5%. Ibid. In the Federal District Court serving the same territory, the Court noted, despite a women-only childcare exemption, women accounted for nearly 40% of those actually serving on juries. See ibid. , n. 25.

The disproportionate and consistent exclusion of women from the [Jackson County] jury wheel and at the venire stage, the Court concluded, was quite obviously due to the system by which juries were selected. Id., at 367. [A]ppropriately tailored hardship exemptions, the Court added, would likely survive a fair-cross-section challenge if justified by an important state interest. Id., at 370. But no such interest, the Court held, could justify Missouri's exemption for each and every woman-the altogether evident explanation for the underrepresentation. Id., at 369-370.

A

As the Michigan Supreme Court correctly observed, see supra, at 6, neither Duren nor any other decision of this Court specifies the method or test courts must use to measure the representation of distinctive groups in jury pools. The courts below and the parties noted three methods employed or identified in lower federal court decisions: absolute disparity, comparative disparity, and standard deviation. See Smith, 463 Mich., at 204-205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 2-3; Brief for Petitioner 3; Brief for Respondent 26; supra, at 6-7.

Each test is imperfect. Absolute disparity and comparative disparity measurements, courts have recognized, can be misleading when, as here, members of the distinctive group comprise [only] a small percentage of those eligible for jury service. Smith, 463 Mich., at 203-204, 615 N. W. 2d, at 2-3. And to our knowledge, [n]o court has accepted [a standard deviation analysis] alone as determinative in Sixth Amendment challenges to jury selection systems. United States v. Rioux, 97 F. 3d 648, 655 (CA2 1996).

On direct review, as earlier stated, the Michigan Supreme Court chose no single method to measure whether representation was fair and reasonable. Smith, 463 Mich., at 204, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3; see supra, at 7. Instead, it adopted a case-by-case approach. Smith, 463 Mich., at 204, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. Provided that the parties proffer sufficient evidence, that court said, the results of all of the tests [should be considered]. Ibid. In contrast, the Sixth Circuit declared that [w]here the distinctive group alleged to have been underrepresented is small, as is the case here, the comparative disparity test is the more appropriate measure of underrepresentation. 543 F. 3d, at 338.

Even in the absence of AEDPAs constraint, see supra , at 8, we would have no cause to take sides today on the method or methods by which underrepresentation is appropriately measured.[Footnote 4] Although the Michigan Supreme Court concluded that [Smiths] statistical evidence failed to establish a legally significant disparity under either the absolute or comparative disparity tests, Smith , 463 Mich., at 204-205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3,[Footnote 5] that court nevertheless gave Smith the benefit of the doubt on underrepresentation, id., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. It did so in order to reach the issue ultimately dispositive in Duren : To the extent underrepresentation existed, was it due to systematic exclusion? Ibid. ; see Duren , 439 U. S., at 364.

Addressing the ground on which the Sixth Circuit rested its decision, Smith submits that the district-court-first assignment order systematically excluded African-Americans from Kent County Circuit Court venires. Brief for Respondent 46-48. But as the Michigan Supreme Court not at all unreasonably concluded, Smith , 463 Mich., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3, Smiths evidence scarcely shows that the assignment order he targets caused underrepresentation. Although the record established that some officials and others in Kent County believed that the assignment order created racial disparities, and the County reversed the order in response, supra, at 5, the belief was not substantiated by Smiths evidence.

Evidence that African-Americans were underrepresented on the Circuit Courts venires in significantly higher percentages than on the Grand Rapids District Courts could have indicated that the assignment order made a critical difference. But, as the Michigan Supreme Court noted, Smith adduced no evidence to that effect. See Smith , 463 Mich., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3. Nor did Smith address whether Grand Rapids, which had the Countys largest African-American population, ha[d] more need for jurors per capita than [any other district in Kent County]. Tr. of Oral Arg. 26; id., at 18, 37. Furthermore, Smith did not endeavor to compare the African-American representation levels in Circuit Court venires with those in the Federal District Court venires for the same region. See id., at 46-47; Duren , 439 U. S., at 367, n. 25.

Smiths best evidence of systematic exclusion was offered by his statistics expert, who reported a decline in comparative underrepresentation, from 18 to 15.1%, after Kent County reversed the assignment order. See supra, at 5. This evidence—particularly in view of AEDPAs instruction, 2254(d)(2)—is insufficient to support Smiths claim that the assignment order caused the underrepresentation. As Smiths counsel recognized at oral argument, this decrease could not fairly be described as a big change. Tr. of Oral Arg. 51; see ibid. (the drop was a step in the right direction). In short, Smiths evidence gave the Michigan Supreme Court little reason to conclude that the district-court-first assignment order had a significantly adverse impact on the representation of African-Americans on Circuit Court venires.

To establish systematic exclusion, Smith contends, the defendant must show only that the underrepresentation is persistent and produced by the method or system used to select [jurors], rather than by chance. Brief for Respondent 38, 40. In this regard, Smith catalogs a laundry list of factors in addition to the alleged siphoning that, he urges, rank as systematic causes of underrepresentation of African-Americans in Kent Countys jury pool. Id., at 53-54. Smiths list includes the Countys practice of excusing people who merely alleged hardship or simply failed to show up for jury service, its reliance on mail notices, its failure to follow up on nonresponses, its use of residential addresses at least 15 months old, and the refusal of Kent County police to enforce court orders for the appearance of prospective jurors. Ibid.

No clearly established precedent of this Court supports Smiths claim that he can make out a prima facie case merely by pointing to a host of factors that, individually or in combination, might contribute to a groups underrepresentation. Smith recites a sentence in our Duren opinion that, he says, placed the burden of proving causation on the State. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 33, 35. The sentence reads: Assuming, arguendo, that the exemptions mentioned by the court below [those for persons over 65, teachers, and government workers] would justify failure to achieve a fair community cross section on jury venires, the State must demonstrate that these exemptions [rather than the womens exemption] caused the underrepresentation complained of. 439 U. S., at 368-369. That sentence appears after the Court had already assigned to Duren-and found he had carried-the burden of proving that the underrepresentation was due to [womens] systematic exclusion in the jury-selection process. Id., at 366. The Courts comment, which Smith clipped from its context, does not concern the demonstration of a prima facie case. Instead, it addresses what the State might show to rebut the defendants prima facie case. The Michigan Supreme Court was therefore far from unreasonable, 2254(d)(1), in concluding that Duren first and foremost required Smith himself to show that the underrepresentation complained of was due to systematic exclusion. Id., at 364; see Smith , 463 Mich., at 205, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3.

This Court, furthermore, has never clearly established that jury-selection-process features of the kind on Smiths list can give rise to a fair-cross-section claim. In Taylor , we recognized broad discretion in the States to prescribe relevant qualifications for their jurors and to provide reasonable exemptions. 419 U. S., at 537-538. And in Duren , the Court understood that hardship exemptions resembling those Smith assails might well survive a fair-cross-section challenge, 439 U. S., at 370.[Footnote 6] In sum, the Michigan Supreme Courts decision rejecting Smiths fair-cross-section claim is consistent with Duren and involved [no] unreasonable application o[f] clearly established Federal law, 2254(d)(1).

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Standard deviation analysis seeks to determine the probability that the disparity between a groups jury-eligible population and the groups percentage in the qualified jury pool is attributable to random chance. See People v. Smith, 463

Mich. 199, 219-220, 615 N. W. 2d 1, 9-10 (2000) (Cavanagh, J., concurring).

Footnote 2

The Sixth Circuit also found that the Michigan Supreme Court had unreasonably applied Duren v. Missouri, 439 U. S. 357 (1979), when it declared that social and economic factors could not establish systematic exclusion. 543 F. 3d, at 341-342. Because such factors disproportionately affect African-Americans, the Sixth Circuit said, Kent Countys routine grants of certain hardship exemptions produced systematic exclusion within the meaning of Duren . Ibid. The Sixth Circuit held, however, that the hardship exemptions could not establish a fair-cross-section claim because the State has a significant interest [in] avoiding undue burdens on individuals by allowing such excuses. Id., at 345.

Footnote 3

Although the question presented by the State homes in on the proper measure for underrepresentation, it initially and more comprehensively inquires whether Smith was denied his right to a jury drawn from a fair cross section of the community. See Pet. for Cert. ii (asking [w]hether the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit erred in concluding that the Michigan Supreme Court failed to apply clearly established Supreme Court precedent under 28 U. S. C. 2254 on the issue of the fair cross-section requirement under Duren .). We therefore address that overarching issue.

Footnote 4

The State asks us to adopt the absolute-disparity standard for measuring fair and reasonable representation and to requir[e] proof that the absolute disparity exceeds 10% to make out a prima facie fair-cross-section violation. Brief for Petitioner 45-46. Under the rule the State proposes, the Sixth Amendment offers no remedy for complete exclusion of distinct groups in communities where the population of the distinct group falls below the 10 percent threshold. Brief for Respondent 35. We need not reach that issue.

Footnote 5

For similar conclusions, see, for example, United States v. Orange , 447 F. 3d 792, 798-799, and n. 7 (CA10 2006) (absolute disparity of 3.57%; comparative disparities rang[ing] from 38.17% to 51.22%); United States v. Royal , 174 F. 3d 1, 10 (CA1 1999) (2.97% absolute disparity; 61.1% comparative disparity); United States v. Rioux , 97 F. 3d 648, 657-658 (CA2 1996) (2.08% absolute disparity; 29% comparative disparity); State v. Gibbs , 254 Conn. 578, 591-593, 758 A. 2d 327, 337-338 (2000) (2.49% absolute disparity; 37% comparative disparity).

Footnote 6

We have also never clearly decided, and have no need to consider here, whether the impact of social and economic factors can support a fair-cross-section claim. Compare Smith , 463 Mich., at 206, 615 N. W. 2d, at 3 ([T]he influence of social and economic factors on juror participation does not demonstrate a systematic exclusion of [a distinctive group].), with 543 F. 3d 326, 341 (CA6 2008) (case below) ([T]he Sixth Amendment is concerned with social or economic factors when the particular system of selecting jurors makes such factors relevant to who is placed on the qualifying list and who is ultimately called to or excused from service on a venire panel.).

559 U. S. ____ (2010)

BERGHUIS V. SMITH

559 U. S. ____ (2010)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

NO. 08-1402

MARY BERGHUIS, WARDEN, PETITIONER v. DIAPOLIS SMITH

on writ of certiorari to the united states court of appeals for the sixth circuit

[March 30, 2010]

Justice Thomas, concurring.

The text of the Sixth Amendment guarantees the right to a trial by an impartial jury. Historically, juries did not include a sampling of persons from all levels of society or even from both sexes. See, e.g. , Alschuler & Deiss, A Brief History of the Criminal Jury in the United States, 61 U. Chi. L. Rev. 867, 877 (1994) (In 1791, [e]very state limited jury service to men; every state except Vermont restricted jury service to property owners or taxpayers; three states permitted only whites to serve; and one state, Maryland, disqualified atheists); Taylor v. Louisiana , 419 U. S. 522 , 533, n. 13 (1975) (In this country women were disqualified by state law to sit as jurors until the end of the 19th century). The Court has nonetheless concluded that the Sixth Amendment guarantees a defendant the right to a jury that represents a fair cross section of the community. Ante , at 1 (citing Taylor , supra).

In my view, that conclusion rests less on the Sixth Amendment than on an amalgamation of the Due Process Clause and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, Duren v. Missouri , 439 U. S. 357 , 372 (1979) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting), and seems difficult to square with the Sixth Amendments text and history. Accordingly, in an appropriate case I would be willing to reconsider our precedents articulating the fair cross section requirement. But neither party asks us to do so here, and the only question before us is whether the state courts disposition was contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, our precedents. See ante , at 23, 810; 28 U. S. C. 2254(d). I concur in the Courts answer to that question.
