

Cook Vs. United States

Cook Vs. United States

SooperKanoon Citation : sooperkanoon.com/95847

Court : US Supreme Court

Decided On : Jan-23-1933

Appeal No. : 288 U.S. 102

Appellant : Cook

Respondent : United States

Judgement :

Cook v. United States - 288 U.S. 102 (1933)

U.S. Supreme Court Cook v. United States, 288 U.S. 102 (1933)

Cook v. United States

No. 82

Argued December 7, 1932

Decided January 23, 1933

288 U.S. 102

CERTIORARI TO THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

SYLLABUS

1. The Treaty of May 22, 1924, with Great Britain, as both its language and its history show, was intended to deal completely with the search and seizure beyond our territorial limits of British vessels suspected of smuggling intoxicating liquors into this country. P. 288 U. S. 112 .

2. Article II of the treaty declares that His Britannic Majesty "will raise no objection" to the boarding of private vessels under the British flag outside of the three-mile limit of territorial waters in order that inquiries may be made of those on board and an examination be made of the ship's papers, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the vessel or those on board are endeavoring to import, or have imported, alcoholic beverages into the United States, in violation of the laws there in force. When this shows reasonable ground for suspicion, a search is permitted, and if there is reasonable cause for belief that the vessel has committed, or is committing or attempting to commit, an offense against the laws of the United States prohibiting importation of alcoholic beverages, she may be seized and taken into a port for adjudication. But it expressly provides that the rights conferred by this Article shall not be exercised at a greater distance from the coast of the United States than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected, etc.

Page 288 U. S. 103

Held that the treaty not only permits boarding, etc., beyond the three-mile limit if the vessel is within one-hour's sailing distance, but also forbids it beyond the three-mile limit as to vessels not within such sailing distance. Pp. 288 U. S. 111 , 288 U. S. 118 .

3. The treaty is self-executing in that no legislation was necessary to authorize executive action in pursuance of its provisions, and it had the effect (and was so interpreted in practice) of superseding, so far as inconsistent with it, the authority conferred by 581 of the Tariff Act of 1922 upon officers of the Coast Guard to board, search and seize within four leagues of the coast. P. 288 U. S. 118 .

4. The treaty was not abrogated by reenacting 581 in the Tariff Act of 1930 in the identical terms of the Act of 1922. P. 288 U. S. 119 .

5. A treaty will not be deemed to have been abrogated or modified by a later statute unless such purpose on the part of Congress has been clearly expressed, and here the contrary appears, in that the committee reports and the debates upon the Act of 1930, like the reenacted section itself, make no reference to the treaty. P. 288 U. S. 120 .

6. Any doubt as to the construction of 581 in this regard is resolved by the consistent departmental practice existing before the reenactment. P. 288 U. S. 120 .

7. Section 581 continued in force, except as modified by treaties. P. 288 U. S. 120 .

8. A British ship with unmanifested intoxicating liquors for illegal importation was seized beyond the three-mile limit, and not within one hour's sailing distance of the coast, and was brought into port, where ship and cargo were libeled.

HELD

(1) That the libels should be dismissed because, by reason of the treaty, this Government lacked the power to seize the ship and the power to subject her to our laws. P. 288 U. S. 121 .

(2) The doctrine that permits the United States to enforce forfeitures for violation of its laws against property of which it has gained possession through the wrongful act of an individual applies where the act was such as it might have authorized beforehand, but not where the United States itself would have had no jurisdiction to make the seizure. Id.

Page 288 U. S. 104

9. The Ship Richmond, 9 Cranch 102, and The Merino, 9 Wheat. 391, also are distinguished. P. 288 U. S. 122 .

56 F.2d 921 reversed.

Certiorari to review the reversal of a decree, 51 F.2d 292, dismissing two libels, against a vessel and its cargo.

Page 288 U. S. 107

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The main question for decision is whether 581 of the Tariff Act of 1930, c. 497, 46 Stat. 590, 747, is modified, as applied to British vessels suspected of being engaged in smuggling liquors into the United States, by the Treaty between this country and Great Britain proclaimed May 22, 1924 (43 Stat. 1761). That section, which is a reenactment in identical language of 581 of the Tariff Act of 1922, c. 356, 42 Stat. 858, 979, declares that officers of the Coast Guard are authorized to stop and board any vessel at any place within four leagues (12 miles) of the coast of the United States "to examine the manifest and to inspect, search, and examine" the vessel and any merchandise therein, and if it shall appear that any violation of any law of the United States has been committed by reason of which the vessel or merchandise is liable to forfeiture, it shall be the duty of such officers to seize the same.

On the evening of November 1, 1930, the British motor screw Mazel Tov, a vessel of speed not exceeding 10 miles an hour, was discovered by officers of the Coast Guard within four leagues of the coast of Massachusetts, and was boarded by them at a point 11 1/2 miles from the nearest land. The manifest was demanded and exhibited. Search followed which disclosed that the only cargo on board, other than ship stores, was unmanifested intoxicating liquor which had been cleared from St. Pierre, a French possession. The vessel, ostensibly bound for Nassau, a British possession, had, when boarded, been cruising off our coast with the intent that ultimately the liquor should be taken to the United States by other boats. But the evidence indicated that she did not intend to approach nearer than four leagues to our coast, and, so far as appeared, she had not been in communication with our shores and had not unladen any part of her cargo. The boarding officers seized the Mazel Tov at a point more than 10 miles from our coast, took her to the Port of Providence, and there delivered the vessel and cargo to the customs officials.

Page 288 U. S. 108

The Collector of Customs, acting pursuant to 584 of the Tariff Act of 1930, assessed against Frank Cook, as master of the Mazel Tov, a penalty of $14,286.18 for failure to include the liquor in the manifest. By 584, if merchandise not described in the manifest is found on board a vessel "bound to the United States," the master is subject to a penalty equal to its value, and the merchandise, belonging or consigned to him is subject to forfeiture. By 594 of the Act, whenever a master becomes subject to a penalty, the vessel may be seized and proceeded against summarily by libel to recover the penalty. The government proceeded, in the federal court for Rhode Island, to collect the assessed penalty by means of libels against both the cargo and the vessel. The cases were consolidated.

Cook, claiming as master and bailee of the vessel and as consignee and claimant of the cargo, alleged that the Mazel Tov was of British registry and owned by a Nova Scotia corporation. He answered to the merits, and excepted to the jurisdiction on the ground that the "vessel was not seized within the territorial limits of any jurisdiction of the United States, but, on the contrary, was captured and boarded at a point more than four (4) leagues from the coast," and that "it was not the intention at any time to enter any of the territorial limits of the United States."

The District Court, having found the facts above stated, dismissed the libels. The Mazel Tov, 51 F.2d 292. The government appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which held that the Treaty did not "effect a change in the customs-revenue laws of the United States, wherein Congress had fixed a four-league protective zone," reversed the judgments, and remanded the cases to the District Court for further proceedings. 56 F.2d 921, 923. This Court granted certiorari. [Footnote 1]

Page 288 U. S. 109

Cook contends, among other things, that, by reason of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain proclaimed May 22, 1924 (43 Stat. 1761), the seizure was unlawful under the laws of the United States; that the authority conferred by 581 of the Tariff Act of 1922 to board, search, and seize within the four-league limit was, as respects British vessels, [Footnote 2] modified by the Treaty so as to substitute for four leagues from our coast, the distance which "can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected of endeavoring to commit the offense;" that Congress, by reenacting 581 in the Tariff Act of 1930, intended to continue in force the modification effected by the Treaty; and, hence, that the Mazel Tov, being a British vessel of a speed not exceeding 10 miles an hour, could not be lawfully boarded, searched, and seized at a distance of 11 1/2 miles from the coast because suspected of "endeavoring to import or have imported alcoholic beverages into the United States in violation of the laws there in force."

Page 288 U. S. 110

The government insists that the Treaty did not have the effect of so modifying 581 of the Act of 1922, and that, if it did, the reenactment of 581 without change, by the Act of 1930, removed the alleged modification. It contends further that the validity of the seizure was not material, and if ever material, had been waived.

The Treaty provides, among other things, as follows:

"Article I. The High Contracting Parties declare that it is their firm intention to uphold the principle that 3 marine miles extending from the coast line outwards and measured from low water mark constitute the proper limits of territorial waters."

"Article II. (1) His Britannic Majesty agrees that he will raise no objection to the boarding of private vessels under the British flag outside the limits of territorial waters by the authorities of the United States, its territories, or possessions in order that enquiries may be addressed to those on board and an examination be made of the ship's papers for the purpose of ascertaining whether the vessel or those on board are endeavoring to import or have imported alcoholic beverages into the United States, its territories, or possessions in violation of the laws there in force. When such enquiries and examination show a reasonable ground for suspicion, a search of the vessel may be instituted."

Page 288 U. S. 111

"(2) If there is reasonable cause for belief that the vessel has committed or is committing or attempting to commit an offense against the laws of the United States, its territories, or possessions prohibiting the importation of alcoholic beverages, the vessel may be seized and taken into a port of the United States, its territories, or possessions for adjudication in accordance with such laws."

"(3) The rights conferred by this article shall not be exercised at a greater distance from the coast of the United States its territories or possessions than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected of endeavoring to commit the offense. In cases, however, in which the liquor is intended to be conveyed to the United States, its territories, or possessions by a vessel other than the one boarded and searched, it shall be the speed of such other vessel, and not the speed of the vessel boarded, which shall determine the distance from the coast at which the right under this article can be exercised."

We are of opinion that the decrees entered by the District Court should have been affirmed.

First. It is suggested on behalf of the government that the power to search and seize within the twelve-mile zone, conferred upon officers of the Coast Guard by 581 of the Tariff Act of 1922 was unaffected by the Treaty, save that the British government agreed not to protest where the seizure was within an hour's sailing distance of the

Page 288 U. S. 112

coast. The argument is that the Treaty settled the validity of the seizure only for those cases where it was made within the limits described in the Treaty, and that, since this seizure was made beyond one hour's sailing distance from the coast, the Treaty did not apply. [Footnote 3] In construing the Treaty, its history should be consulted. Compare United States v. Texas, 162 U. S. 1 ; Oklahoma v. Texas, 260 U. S. 606 ; Nielsen v. Johnson, 279 U. S. 47 , 279 U. S. 52 . Both its language and its history show that the high contracting parties did not intend so to limit its operation. The preamble states that they entered into the Treaty

"being desirous of avoiding any difficulties which might arise between them in connection with the laws in force in the United States on the subject of alcoholic beverages."

The history reveals that serious differences had arisen between the two governments in that connection, and that, for the purpose of resolving them, the parties determined to deal completely with the subject of search and seizure, beyond our territorial limits, of British vessels suspected of smuggling liquors.

Prior to the Eighteenth Amendment, the United States had never attempted, in connection with the enforcement of our customs laws, to board foreign vessels beyond the three-mile limit except where consent was implied from the fact that the vessel, being hailed, answered that she was bound for the United States, or where a vessel had been discovered violating our laws within the three-mile limit, and, while endeavoring to escape, was hotly pursued. Although Hovering Acts conferring authority to board and search vessels, foreign and domestic, "within four leagues of the coast," had existed since the foundation of our government, see Act of August 4, 1790, c. 35, 31,

Page 288 U. S. 113

1 Stat. 145, 164, [Footnote 4] the authority therein conferred had, prior to the Tariff Act of 1922, been in terms limited to inbound vessels, and no statute had purported to confer authority to seize foreign vessels beyond our territorial waters for violation of any of our laws, except in those few instances in which Congress acted pursuant to specific treaties. [Footnote 5] But, soon after the Eighteenth Amendment took effect (January 16, 1920), vessels of British registry were found to be engaged in smuggling intoxicating liquors into the United States in violation of our laws. [Footnote 6] In the effort to prevent such violations, British vessels were being boarded, searched, and seized beyond the three-mile limit, [Footnote 7] and, by 581 of the Tariff Act of 1922, Congress

Page 288 U. S. 114

undertook to sanction such action through enlarging the authority to board, search, and seize beyond the three-mile limit so as to include foreign vessels, although not inbound. [Footnote 8]

Both before and after the passage of the Tariff Act of 1922, it was the consistent policy of our government to release, upon protest, all British vessels seized beyond the three-mile limit and not bound to the United States unless it appeared that the hovering vessel had, by means of her own small boats and crew, assisted in landing there contraband goods. [Footnote 9] Our government deemed that exception

Page 288 U. S. 115

an essential to the enforcement of our laws and consistent with the principles of international law. [Footnote 10] But the British government declined to acquiesce in the propriety of the exception; declared that our practice of seizing vessels under those circumstances was not in harmony with the law of nations; [Footnote 11] protested against the seizure of any British vessel outside of the three-mile limit; [Footnote 12] and stated that insistence upon the practice would be regarded as creating "a very serious situation." [Footnote 13]

With a view to removing the British objections, the Secretary of State proposed, on June 26, 1922, that a treaty be entered into

"under which the authorities of each nation would be authorized to exercise beyond the three-mile limit of territorial waters a measure of control over vessels belonging to the other,"

Page 288 U. S. 116

and which would include specifically

"reciprocal provisions authorizing the authorities of each Government to exercise a right of search of vessels of the other beyond the three-mile limit of territorial waters to the extent of twelve miles from the shore. [Footnote 14]"

The British government declined definitely to entertain any such proposal. [Footnote 15]

The decision rendered by this Court on April 30, 1923, in Cunard Steamship Co. v. Mellon, 262 U. S. 100 , led to the resumption of negotiations. It was there decided that the National Prohibition Act applied to all merchant vessels, foreign or domestic, within the territorial waters of the United States, and that the carrying of intoxicating liquors, either as cargo or as sea stores, through the territorial waters or into the ports and harbors of the United States is forbidden by that Act and the Eighteenth Amendment. The embarrassment to British vessels and trade threatened by this decision was serious. [Footnote 16] Recognizing the urgent need of some arrangement between the two governments which would permit the conduct by the British of legitimate trade and remove this obstacle to the operation of their vessels in the accustomed manner, the Secretary of State submitted to Great Britain, on June 11, 1923, the draft of a treaty designed to remove the friction between the two governments. The draft did not refer specifically to intoxicating liquors. Article I provided, in general terms, that the authorities of each country should, "within the distance of twelve geographical miles from its coasts," be permitted to board and search private vessels of the other to ascertain whether such vessels were engaged in an attempt to violate its laws "prohibiting or regulating the unloading near, or importation into its territories of any article," and, "if there is reasonable cause for belief" that the vessel is so engaged, to seize it. Article II likewise, in general terms, provided that articles on private vessels of either nation listed as sea stores, or as cargo destined to a foreign port, the importation of which is prohibited, might be brought within the territorial waters of the other on condition that they be sealed "upon arrival of the vessel so destined within twelve geographical miles of the coasts" and be kept sealed continuously thereafter while within the territorial waters.

Page 288 U. S. 117

This proposal of the Secretary of State also failed to meet with the approval of the British government because it was regarded as involving an extension of the limits of the territorial waters. [Footnote 17] The negotiations were, however, continued, and ultimately the British government submitted a counterproposal which sought to achieve the same results by different means. The British draft provided that the high contracting parties should declare "their firm intention to uphold the principle that three marine miles measured from low water mark constitute the proper limits of territorial waters;" and, avoiding all language which could possibly indicate a contrary purpose, it made no reference to the twelve-mile limit. Moreover, the arrangement, instead of applying generally to merchandise subject to prohibitory or regulatory laws, was to be limited specifically to intoxicating liquors, and no reciprocal rights were to be conferred. Each country was to secure the immunity required to satisfy its peculiar need. The need of the United States was to be met by providing that His Britannic Majesty "will raise no objection to the boarding," etc., outside the territorial waters at no "greater distance from the coast of the United States than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected of" smuggling. The need of Great Britain was to be met by our allowing

Page 288 U. S. 118

"British vessels voyaging to or from the ports or passing through the waters of the United States to have on board alcoholic liquors listed as sea stores or as cargo destined for a foreign port, provided that such liquor is kept under seal while within the jurisdiction of the United States. [Footnote 18]"

The draft of treaty submitted by the British government was accepted with a few purely verbal changes. Thereby, as stated in Ford v. United States, 273 U. S. 593 , 273 U. S. 609 -610, this country secured

"a definite fixing of the zone of legitimate seizure of British hovering vessels seeking to defeat the laws against importation of liquor into this country from the sea."

Second. The Treaty, being later in date than the Act of 1922, superseded, so far as inconsistent with the terms of the Act, the authority which had been conferred by 581 upon officers of the Coast Guard to board, search, and seize beyond our territorial waters. Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190 , 124 U. S. 194 . For, in a strict sense, the Treaty was self-executing, in that no legislation was necessary to authorize executive action pursuant to its provisions. [Footnote 19]

Page 288 U. S. 119

The purpose of the provisions for seizure in 581, and their practical operation, as an aid in the enforcement of the laws prohibiting alcoholic liquors, leave no doubt that the territorial limitations there established were modified by the Treaty. This conclusion is supported by the course of administrative practice. Shortly after the Treaty took effect, the Treasury Department issued amended instructions for the Coast Guard which pointed out, after reciting the provisions of 581, that, "in cases of special treaties, the provisions of those treaties shall be complied with;" and called attention particularly to the recent treaties dealing with the smuggling of intoxicating liquors. [Footnote 20] The Commandant of the Coast Guard, moreover, was informed in 1927, as the Solicitor General states, that all seizures of British vessels captured in the rum-smuggling trade should be within the terms of the Treaty, and that seizing officers should be instructed to produce evidence not that the vessel was found within the four-league limit, but that she was apprehended within one hour's sailing distance from the coast.

Third. The Treaty was not abrogated by reenacting 581 in the Tariff Act of 1930 in the identical terms of the Act of 1922. A treaty will not be deemed to have been abrogated or modified by a later statute unless such purpose on the part of Congress has been clearly expressed. Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536 ; United States v. Payne, 264 U. S. 446 , 264 U. S. 448 . Here, the contrary appears. The committee reports and the debates upon the Act of 1930, like the reenacted section itself, make no reference to the Treaty of 1924. Any doubt as to the construction of the section should be deemed resolved by the consistent departmental practice existing before its reenactment. Compare United States v. G. Falk & Brother, 204 U. S. 143 ; Nagle v. Loi Hoa, 275 U. S. 475 , 275 U. S. 481 ; Brewster v. Gage, 280 U. S. 327 , 280 U. S. 337 ; McCaughn v. Hershey Chocolate Co., 283 U. S. 488 , 283 U. S. 492 ; United States v. Ryan, 284 U. S. 167 , 284 U. S. 175 . No change in this respect was made either by the Department of the Treasury or the Department of Justice after the Tariff Act of 1930.

Page 288 U. S. 120

Searches and seizures in the enforcement of the laws prohibiting alcoholic liquors are governed, since the 1930 Act, as they were before, by the provisions of the Treaty. Section 581, with its scope narrowed by the Treaty, remained in force after its reenactment in the Act of 1930. The section continued to apply to the boarding, search, and seizure of all vessels of all countries with which we had no relevant treaties. It continued also, in the enforcement of our customs laws not related to the prohibition of alcoholic liquors, to govern the boarding of vessels of those countries with which we had entered into treaties like that with Great Britain.

Fourth. As the Mazel Tov was seized without warrant of law, the libels were properly dismissed. The government contends that the alleged illegality of the seizure is immaterial. It argues that the facts proved show a violation of our law for which the penalty of forfeiture is prescribed; that the United States may, by filing a libel for forfeiture, ratify what otherwise would have been an illegal seizure; that the seized vessel having been brought into the Port of Providence, the federal court for Rhode Island acquired jurisdiction, and that, moreover, the claimant by answering to the merits, waived any right to object to enforcement of the penalties. The argument rests upon misconceptions.

Page 288 U. S. 121

It is true that, where the United States, having possession of property, files a libel to enforce a forfeiture resulting from a violation of its laws, the fact that the possession was acquired by a wrongful act is immaterial. Dodge v. United States, 272 U. S. 530 , 272 U. S. 532 . Compare Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436 , 119 U. S. 444 . The doctrine rests primarily upon the common law rules that any person may, at his peril, seize property which has become forfeited to, or forfeitable by, the government, and that proceedings by the government to enforce a forfeiture ratify a seizure made by one without authority, since ratification is equivalent to antecedent delegation of authority to seize. Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 246, 16 U. S. 310 ; Taylor v. United States, 3 How. 197, 44 U. S. 205 -206. The doctrine is not applicable here. The objection to the seizure is not that it was wrongful merely because made by one upon whom the government had not conferred authority to seize at the place where the seizure was made. The objection is that the government itself lacked power to seize, since, by the Treaty, it had imposed a territorial limitation upon its own authority. The Treaty fixes the conditions under which a "vessel may be seized and taken into a port of the United States, its territories or possessions for adjudication in accordance with" the applicable laws. Thereby, Great Britain agreed that adjudication may follow a rightful seizure. Our government, lacking power to seize, lacked power, because of the Treaty, to subject the vessel to our laws. To hold that adjudication may follow a wrongful seizure would go far to nullify the purpose and effect of the Treaty. Compare United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407 .

Page 288 U. S. 122

The case differs from The Ship Richmond, 9 Cranch 102, and The Merino, 9 Wheat. 391, where forfeitures of vessels wrongfully seized by our Navy were upheld. [Footnote 21] There, the vessels seized were of American registry, and the seizures did not violate any treaty, but were merely violations of the law of nations because made within the territory of another sovereign. In those cases, it was held that the illegality of the seizures did not affect the venue of the action or the process of the court. Here, the objection is more fundamental. It is to the jurisdiction of the United States. The objection is not met by distinguishing between the custody of the Coast Guard and the subsequent custody of the Marshal. Nor is it lost by the entry of an answer to the merits. The ordinary incidents of possession of the vessel and the cargo yield to the international agreement.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND and MR. JUSTICE BUTLER are of opinion that, in respect of British vessels engaged in smuggling intoxicating liquor into the United States, the Treaty of 1924 was not intended to cut down the rights claimed by the United States under the hovering statutes in force since the organization of our government, but that it was the purpose of both countries to extend and enlarge such rights to enable the United States more effectively to enforce its liquor laws, and that therefore the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[Footnote 1]

The view that the Treaty modified the limits within which British vessels might be seized for violation of the laws prohibiting alcoholic liquors is supported by the following cases: The Frances Louise, 1 F.2d 1004; The Marjorie E. Bachman, 4 F.2d 405; The Sagatind, 11 F.2d 673, 675; The Over the Top, 5 F.2d 838, 844; Ford v. United States, 10 F.2d 339, 347, aff'd, 273 U. S. 273 U.S. 593; Hennings v. United States, 13 F.2d 74, 75; United States v. Ferris, 19 F.2d 925, 926; United States v. Schouweiler, 19 F.2d 387. Compare United States v. Cargo of Intoxicating Liquors ex British Schooner Patara, 40 F.2d 74. In other cases, the view has been expressed that the treaties did not restrict at all events the right of seizure. The Vincennes, 20 F.2d 164, 174, aff'd sub nom. Gillam v. United States, 27 F.2d 296 (compare id., 27 F.2d page 301); The Panama, 6 F.2d 326, 327; The Resolution, 30 F.2d 534, 537, 538; The Pescawha, 45 F.2d 221, 222. Compare also the following cases in which seizure was made within twelve miles, but in which it does not appear whether it was made within an hour's sailing distance or whether the question of the effect of the treaties was raised. The Mistinguette, 27 F.2d 738; United States v. 63 Kegs of Malt, 27 F.2d 741; The Newton Bay, 30 F.2d 444, aff'd, 36 F.2d 729; The Amaranth, 35 F.2d 872; The Marion Phillis, 36 F.2d 688; The Deauville, 49 F.2d 372; The Throndyke, 53 F.2d 239; The Miss C.B., 59 F.2d 744.

[Footnote 2]

Similar treaties have been entered into with fifteen other countries; Norway, July 2, 1924 (43 Stat. 1772); Denmark, July 25, 1924 (43 Stat. 1809); Germany, August 11, 1924 (43 Stat. 1815); Sweden, August 18, 1924 (43 Stat. 1830); Italy, October 22, 1924 (43 Stat. 1844); Panama, January 19, 1925 (43 Stat. 1875); Netherlands, April 8, 1925 (44 Stat. 2013); Cuba, June 19, 1926 (44 Stat. 2395); Spain, November 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 2465); France, March 12, 1927 (45 Stat. 2403); Belgium, January 11, 1928 (45 Stat. 2456); Greece, February 18, 1929 (45 Stat. 2736); Japan, January 16, 1930 (46 Stat. 2446); Poland, August 8, 1930 (46 Stat. 2773); Chile, November 26, 1930 (46 Stat. 2852). The only substantial difference in these treaties is in Article One, dealing with the general principle of a three-mile limit; in the treaties with Great Britain, the Netherlands, Germany, Cuba, Panama, and Japan, the principle is declared to be accepted, while in the others, rights and claims in that regard are declared to be reserved.

[Footnote 3]

The argument was advanced by the Solicitor General as representing the view not of the Department of Justice, but of other lawyers for the government.

[Footnote 4]

Re-enacted by Act of March 2, 1799, c. 22, 54, 1 Stat. 627, 668, and see R.S. 3067.

The model for the American statutes was the British Hovering Act of 1736, 9 Geo. II, c. 35, 23, which provided for the forfeiture of vessels under 100 tons into which foreign goods were taken within four leagues of the coast. Compare the earlier British Hovering Acts of 1709 and 1718; 8 Anne, c. 7, 17; 5 Geo. I, c. 11. In 1876, all existing hovering acts were repealed by the Customs Consolidation Act, 39 & 40 Vict., c. 36, which provides in 159 for the forfeiture of vessels belonging in whole or in part to British subjects or having half the persons on board British subjects, where the vessel is found, or discovered to have been, within three leagues of the coast, and for the forfeiture of other vessels found, or discovered to have been, within one league of the coast. For the development of the British law, see William E. Masterson, Jurisdiction in Marginal Seas, pp. 1-173.

[Footnote 5]

For those acts, see Maul v. United States, 274 U. S. 501 , 274 U. S. 517 , note 18.

[Footnote 6]

The note of the Secretary of June 26, 1922, to the British Ambassador, recites "that many of the ships engaged in the illegal smuggling of liquor into the United States are registered under the British flag, and that large quantities of liquor are carried by such vessels" from British possessions. Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 7]

The Henry L. Marshall, (286 F. 260, 262), was seized August 12, 1921; The Grace and Ruby (283 F. 475) on February 23, 1922; The Marion L. Mosher on July 27, 1923 (United States v. United States Fidelity & Surety Co., decided August 13, 1923, in the District Court for the Eastern District of New York (no opinion filed)); The Louise F. (293 F. 933) on November 5, 1923; The Island Home (13 F.2d 382) on November 24, 1923; The Muriel E. Winters (6 F.2d 466) on January 6, 1924. For notices of other seizures of this kind, not resulting in adjudication, see Philip C. Jessup, The Law of Territorial Waters and Maritime Jurisdiction, pp. 254-256.

In reply to a question in the House of Commons on June 6, 1923, concerning the number of British vessels seized, the Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs replied:

"Broadly speaking, some 20 or 25 cases are known to His Majesty's Government where vessels, mostly of Canadian registry, have been seized. The seizures have occurred at varying distances from the shore, some within and some without the three-mile limit. The crews have nearly always been detained for varying periods. His Majesty's Embassy at Washington have acted repeatedly, and in the strongest possible manner, to secure the release of vessels seized outside the three-mile limit, or inside it when a genuine case of distress seemed to be made out."

164 Parliamentary Debates (Commons), 5th Series, col. 2212.

[Footnote 8]

See Congressional Record, Vol. 62, Part 11, 67th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 11,593. An amendment to 581, as reported, was proposed and withdrawn; the amendment would have made the section applicable specifically to searches and seizures for violation of the laws prohibiting alcoholic liquors. As enacted, however, the section did not fall short of the powers which the amendment would have granted in more particular terms. See Philip C. Jessup, The Law of Territorial Waters and Maritime Jurisdiction, p. 214.

[Footnote 9]

See Report of the Attorney General, 1923, pp. 89, 90. The practice was adopted of requiring a bond, on release, conditioned on the delivery of the cargo to the ports named in the clearance papers. Ibid. The class of vessels not released was extended, in the case of the Henry L. Marshall, to include a vessel beyond the three-mile limit where, although the small boats were not the vessel's own, there was unity of control over the vessel and boats. The Henry L. Marshall, 286 F. 260, aff'd, 292 F. 486.

[Footnote 10]

A statement of the American position is contained in a communication from the Secretary of State to the American Charge d'Affaires and interim in London, dated August 25, 1923. MS. Records, Dept. of State. And see the communication of the Secretary of State to the British Ambassador, January 18, 1923, in which the American position is declared to be supported by the view of the British government concerning the seizure by the Russian authorities in 1888 of the British schooner Araunah (82 British and Foreign State Papers, p. 1058). Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927. See also the address of the Secretary of State before the Council of Foreign Relations, on January 23, 1924, printed in 18 American Journal of International Law, p. 229.

[Footnote 11]

The British government stated that, by the Customs Consolidation Act of 1876 "British municipal legislation is made to conform with international law." Note of July 14, 1923, MS. Records, Dept. of State. For the Act, see note 4 supra.

[Footnote 12]

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State, December 30, 1922, Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 13]

The British Charge d'Affaires and interim to the Secretary of State, July 10, 1923, Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 14]

Letter to the British Ambassador, June 26, 1922, Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 15]

The British Ambassador to the Secretary of State, October 13, 1922, Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 16]

On May 25, 1923, the British Ambassador addressed a note to the Secretary of State protesting against the application of the principle announced in this decision. A reply to this note was sent to the British Ambassador on June 6, 1923. MS. Records, Dept. of State. The British position was stated at length by Lord Curzon in the House of Lords on June 28, 1923. 54 Parl.Deb. (Lords), 5th series, cols. 721-729.

Protests were likewise sent by the Italian government, on May 29, 1923; by the Belgian government, on May 28, 1923; by the Netherlands government, on June 1, 1923; by the Norwegian government, on June 7, 1923; by the Portuguese government, on July 25, 1923; by the Swedish government, on May 31, 1923, and by the Danish government, on June 1, 1923. Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 17]

The British Charge d'Affaires ad interim to the Acting Secretary of State, September 17, 1923, Dept. of State Press Release, February 16, 1927.

[Footnote 18]

Draft Treaty, left with the Secretary of State by the British Charge d'Affaires, December 3, 1923.

[Footnote 19]

Ford v. United States, 273 U. S. 593 . Such was the view of the Secretary of State, expressed in a letter of March 3, 1924, to the Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. See Hearings Before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, on H.Res. 174, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 7. Compare, as to the meaning of "self-executing," Edwin D. Dickinson, Are the Liquor Treaties Self-Executing? 20 American Journal of International Law, p. 444.

[Footnote 20]

Amendments to Instructions, Customs, Navigation, and Motor-Boat Laws and Duties of Boarding Officers, 1923, No. 3, issued December 11, 1924.

[Footnote 21]

See also The Homestead, 7 F.2d 413, 415. Compare United States v. Bowman, 260 U. S. 94 .