

United States Vs. Williams

United States Vs. Williams

SooperKanoon Citation : sooperkanoon.com/98623

Court : US Supreme Court

Decided On : Jan-08-1951

Appeal No. : 341 U.S. 70

Appellant : United States

Respondent : Williams

Judgement :

United States v. Williams - 341 U.S. 70 (1951)

U.S. Supreme Court United States v. Williams, 341 U.S. 70 (1951)

United States v. Williams

No. 26

Argued January 8, 1951

341 U.S. 70

CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

SYLLABUS

After one of the respondents had been convicted and the others acquitted of substantive offenses under what is now 18 U.S.C. 242 -- i.e., beating or aiding and abetting the beating of certain suspects until they confessed to a theft -- they were convicted in the Federal District Court for a violation of what is now 18 U.S.C. 241. The indictment arose out of the same facts, and alleged that, "acting under the laws of . . . Florida," they

"conspired to injure the free exercise and enjoyment of the rights and privileges secured to him and protected by the Fourteenth Amendment."

The Court of Appeals reversed their conviction on this conspiracy indictment.

Held: the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed. P. 341 U. S. 82 .

(a) MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE MINTON, was of the opinion that 241 only covers conduct which interferes with rights arising from the substantive powers of the Federal Government, and that including an allegation that the defendants acted under color of state law in an indictment under 241 does not extend the protection of the section to rights which the Federal Constitution merely guarantees against abridgment by the States. Pp. 341 U. S. 71 -82.

(b) MR. JUSTICE BLACK concurred in the result on the ground that trial under this conspiracy indictment was barred by the principle of res judicata. Pp. 341 U. S. 86 -86.

179 F.2d 644 affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, joined by MR. JUSTICE REED, MR. JUSTICE BURTON, and MR. JUSTICE CLARK, dissented. P. 341 U. S. 87 .

A conviction of respondents for violation of what is now 18 U.S.C. 241 was reversed by the Court of Appeals. 179 F.2d 644. This Court granted certiorari. 340 U.S. 849. Affirmed, p. 341 U. S. 82 .

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER announced the judgment of the Court and an opinion in which THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE MINTON joined.

In 1947, a Florida corporation employed a detective agency to investigate thefts of its property. The inquiry was conducted by one Williams, the head of the agency, and among the participants were two of his employees and a member of the Miami police force detailed to assist in the investigation. Certain of the company's employees fell under suspicion, and Williams and his collaborators, without arresting the suspects, took them one by one to a shack on the company's premises. There, the investigators subjected them to the familiar "third-degree" which, after blows, kicks, threats, and prolonged exposure to a brilliant light, yielded "confessions."

Williams and the other three were thereupon indicted for violation of 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code of the United States. 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 51 and 52, now 18 U.S.C. (1950 ed.) 241 and 242. Williams was convicted under 20, the indictment alleging that he

"willfully, under color of the laws, statutes, ordinances, regulations and customs of the Florida . . . subjected . . . an inhabitant of the Florida to deprivation of the rights, privileges and immunities secured to him and protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. . . ."

This conviction is reviewed in No. 365, post, p. 341 U. S. 97 , also decided this day. The other defendants were acquitted of the charges under 20, and, as to all defendants, a mistrial was declared under 19. This outcome of the indictment under 19 and 20 was followed by a new indictment against the four defendants under 19. The indictment alleged that, "acting under the laws of the Florida," the defendants

Page 341 U. S. 72

"conspired to injure . . . a citizen of the United States and of the Florida, in the free exercise and enjoyment of the rights and privileges secured to him and protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. . . ."

This time all the defendants were convicted, but, on appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed. It held that, in the conspiracy provision of 19

"the Congress had in mind the federal rights and privileges which appertain to citizens as such and not the general rights extended to all persons by the clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

179 F.2d 644, 648. In the alternative, the court concluded that a broader construction of 19 would render it void for indefiniteness, and that there was error in the judge's charge, as well as in the exclusion of evidence of the prior acquittal of three of the defendants. Together with Nos. 134 and 365 of this Term, the other two cases growing out of the same affair, we brought the case here because important questions in the administration of civil rights legislation are raised. 340 U.S. 849.

The alternative grounds for the decision of the Court of Appeals need not be considered, for we agree that 241 (to use the current designation for what was 19 of the Criminal Code) does not reach the conduct laid as an offense in the prosecution here. This is not because we deny the power of Congress to enforce by appropriate criminal sanction every right guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; nor is it because we fully accept the course of reasoning of the court below. We base our decision on the history of 241, its text and context, the statutory framework in which it stands, its practical and judicial application controlling elements in construing a federal criminal provision that affects the wise adjustment between State responsibility and national control of essentially local affairs. The elements all converge in one direction. They lead us to hold that 241 only covers conduct which interferes with rights arising from the substantive powers of the Federal Government.

Page 341 U. S. 73

What is now known as 241 originated as 6 of the Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 140. That statute was entitled "An Act to enforce the Right of Citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other Purposes." In furtherance of its chief end of assuring the right of Negroes to vote, it provided in 2 and 3 that it should be a misdemeanor for any "person or officer" wrongfully to fail in a duty imposed on him by State law to perform or permit performance of acts necessary to registering or voting. In 4, interference with elections by private persons was made a similar offense. In the course of passage through Congress, several sections were added which had a larger purpose. One of them, 17, was derived from the Civil Rights Act of 1866, 14 Stat. 27, and was designed to "secure to all persons the equal protection of the laws."  [Footnote 1 ] It imposed imprisonment up to one year and a fine up to one thousand dollars on

"any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, shall subject, or cause to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the deprivation of any right secured or protected by the last preceding section of this act, or to different punishment, pains, or penalties on account of such person being an alien, or by reason of his color or race, than is prescribed for the punishment of citizens. . . ."

16 Stat. 140, 144.

Page 341 U. S. 74

Through successive revisions, it has become 242, the application of which to the facts before us is considered in No. 365, post, p. 341 U. S. 97 .

Another of the broader provisions is the section which is our immediate concern. This was its original form:

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if two or more persons shall band or conspire together, or go in disguise upon the public highway, or upon the premises of another, with intent to violate any provision of this act, or to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise and enjoyment of any right or privilege granted or secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having exercised the same, such persons shall be held guilty of felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined or imprisoned, or both at the discretion of the court -- the fine not to exceed five thousand dollars, and the imprisonment not to exceed ten years -- and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to, and disabled from holding, any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

16 Stat. 140, 141.

The dominant conditions of the Reconstruction Period were not conducive to the enactment of carefully considered and coherent legislation. Strong post-war feeling caused inadequate deliberation, and led to loose and careless phrasing of laws relating to the new political issues. The sections before us are no exception. Although enacted together, they were proposed by different sponsors, and hastily adopted. They received little attention in debate. While the discussion of the bill as a whole fills about 100 pages of the Congressional Globe, only two or three related to 6, and these are in good part a record of complaint that the section was inadequately considered or understood.

Page 341 U. S. 75

 [Footnote 2 ]

Nevertheless, some conclusions are warranted. The first is that interference with civil rights by State officers was dealt with fully by 17 of the Act. Three years before its enactment, Congress had passed the first general conspiracy statute. Act of March 2, 1867, 30, 14 Stat. 484, R.S. 5440, now 18 U.S.C. (1950 ed.) 371. This provision, in conjunction with 17, reached conspiracies under color of State law to deprive persons of rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. No other provision of the Act of 1870 was necessary for that purpose.

Page 341 U. S. 76

The second conclusion is that, if language is to carry any meaning at all, it must be clear that the principal purpose of 6, unlike 17, was to reach private action, rather than officers of a State acting under its authority. Men who "go in disguise upon the public highway, or upon the premises of another" are not likely to be acting in official capacities. The history of the times -- the lawless activities of private bands, of which the Klan was the most conspicuous -- explains why Congress dealt with both State disregard of the new constitutional prohibitions and private lawlessness.  [Footnote 3 ] The sponsor of 6 in the Senate made explicit that the purpose of his amendment was to control private conduct.  [Footnote 4 ]

Page 341 U. S. 77

These two conclusions strongly suggest a third: that the rights which 6 protects are those which Congress can beyond doubt constitutionally secure against interference by private individuals. Decisions of this Court have established that this category includes rights which arise from the relationship of the individual and the Federal Government. The right of citizens to vote in congressional elections, for instance, may obviously be protected by Congress from individual as well as from State interference. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651 . On the other hand, we have consistently held that the category of rights which Congress may constitutionally protect from interference by private persons excludes those rights which the Constitution merely guarantees from interference by a State. Thus, we held that an individual's interest in receiving a fair trial in State courts cannot be constitutionally vindicated by federal prosecution of private persons. United States v. Powell, 212 U.S. 564; accord, Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1 ; United

Page 341 U. S. 78

States v. Wheeler, 254 U. S. 281 . The distinction which these decisions draw between rights that flow from the substantive powers of the Federal Government and may clearly be protected from private interference, and interests which the Constitution only guarantees from interference by States, is a familiar one in American law. See, e.g., Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303 , 100 U. S. 310 .

To construe 6 so as to protect interests not arising from the relationship of the individual with the Federal Government, but only guaranteed by the Constitution from interference by the States, would make its scope duplicate the coverage of 17 and the general conspiracy clause. That this is not, in fact, what Congress desired is confirmed by further examination of the text of the statute. Full allowance for hasty draftsmanship cannot obscure clear indications from the text that the category of interests protected by 6 does not include the rights against State action secured by 17.

Thus, when Congress wished to protect from State action interests guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, it described them in 17 as rights "secured or protected" by the Constitution. But, in 6, the narrower phrase "granted or secured" is used to define the interests protected from interference by individuals. When Congress wanted to reach action by State officers, the explicit reference in 17 to "color" of State law demonstrates that Congress knew how to make this purpose known. Similarly, reference in 2 and 3 to "persons or officers" indicates that Congress was able explicitly to draft a section applicable to persons acting in private and official capacities alike. In contrast, 6 was made applicable simply to "persons." Nothing in its terms indicates that color of State law was to be relevant to prosecution under it.  [Footnote 5 ]

Page 341 U. S. 79

To find this significance in the text of the Act of 1870 is not to give undue weight to differences in phraseology appearing in the statute. For the text of these sections has been considered by Congress not once, but five times. Some minor changes of phraseology were made in the course of the successive revisions. But neither the Revised Statutes of 1874-1878, nor the Criminal Code of 1909, nor the 1926 codification in the United States Code, nor the 1948 revision of the Criminal Code indicates, either in text or revisor's commentary, any change in substance. The continuity of meaning is indicated in the Appendix to this opinion.

In three of the revisions, furthermore, Congress had before it a consistent course of decisions of this Court indicating that 6 -- now 241 -- was, in practice, interpreted only to protect rights arising from the existence and powers of the Federal Government. The pattern was established by United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 . The defendants were indicted for conspiring to deprive some Negro citizens of rights secured by the Constitution. This Court affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court arresting judgment entered on a verdict of guilty. It found that counts alleging interference with rights secured by the First, Second, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments were objectionable, because the rights asserted were not "granted or secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States" within the meaning of the statute. 92 U.S. at 92 U. S. 551 . The pattern set by this case has never been departed from.

Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651 , was the first of seven decisions in which the Court held or assumed that the right to vote in federal elections was protected by this legislation because it was a right "granted or secured" by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S. 347 ; United States v. Mosley, 238 U. S. 383 , and United States v. Saylor, 322 U. S. 385 , held that interference by private persons with the right to vote in general elections for members of Congress is an offense under 241; in United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 299 , the statute was found applicable to the Louisiana system of primary elections for Congress.  [Footnote 6 ]

Page 341 U. S. 80

In United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76 , interference with the right to establish a claim under the Homestead Acts brought the offender within 241. The right did not pertain to United States citizenship; but, since it was "wholly dependent upon the act of Congress," obstructing its exercise came "within the purview of the statute and of the constitutional power of Congress to make such statute." 112 U.S. at 112 U. S. 79 -80. Similarly, the Court has held that assault upon a citizen in the custody of a United States marshal is a violation of the statute, Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263 . And so, a citizen may not be denied the right to inform on violation of federal laws. In re Quarles, 158 U. S. 532 ; Motes v. United States, 178 U. S. 458 .

Contrariwise, we have held that conspiracies to force citizens to give up their jobs or compel them to move out of a State are not within the terms of the statute. Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1 ; United States v. Wheeler, 254 U. S. 281 . And, in United States v. Powell, 212 U.S. 564, we held that participants in a mob which seized a

Page 341 U. S. 81

Negro from the custody of the local sheriff and lynched him were not indictable under 241.  [Footnote 7 ]

In none of these decisions was the precise issue before us decided, for in none was it alleged that the defendants acted under color of State law. But the validity of a conviction under 241 depends on the scope of that section, which cannot be expanded by the draftsman of an indictment. The uses to which a statute has been put are strong evidence of the ends it was intended to serve. In this instance, the decisions buttress what common sense and a spontaneous reading of the statute independently make clear, and give added significance to repeated reenactment without substantial change.  [Footnote 8 ] All the evidence points to the same conclusion: that 241 applies only to interference with rights which arise from the relation of the victim and the Federal Government, and not to interference by State officers with rights which the Federal Government merely guarantees from abridgment by the States.

Page 341 U. S. 82

To reject this evidence and hold the indictment valid under 241 not only involves a new, distorting construction of an old statute. It also makes for redundancy and confusion, and raises some needless constitutional problems. For if we assume that a conspiracy such as that described here is under color of State law, it can be reached under 242 and the general conspiracy statute. Indeed, the defendants before us were indicted and tried for violation of 242; the conviction of one of them under that section is before us in No. 365. Unlike 242, the section now before us is not qualified by the requirement that the defendants have acted "willfully," and the very specialized content attributed to that word was found essential to sustaining 242 in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91 . Nor does the defined crime have as an ingredient that the conspiracy be under color of State law. Criminal statutes should be given the meaning their language most obviously invites. Their scope should not be extended to conduct not clearly within their terms.

We therefore hold that including an allegation that the defendants acted under color of State law in an indictment under 241 does not extend the protection of the section to rights which the Federal Constitution merely guarantees against abridgment by the States. Since, under this interpretation of the statute, the indictment must fall, the judgment of the court below is

Affirmed.

For opinion of MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring in the result, see post, p. [341 U. S. 85 .]

For dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, joined by MR. JUSTICE REED, MR. JUSTICE BURTON, and MR. JUSTICE CLARK, see post, p. [341 U. S. 87 .]

Page 341 U. S. 83

 [Footnote 1 ]

See the remarks of Senator Stewart at the time he proposed the amendment, Cong.Globe, 41st Cong., 2d Sess., 3480 (1870).

 [Footnote 2 ]

Sections 2, 3, and 4 appeared in the bill as it was first introduced into the Senate. Cong.Globe, 41st Cong., 2d Sess. 3480 (1870). Section 17 was proposed by Senator Stewart at the outset of the debate. Ibid. Section 6 was subsequently proposed by Senator Pool. Id. 3612.

The debate of the Senate, which considered the Act as in Committee of the Whole, is found between pp. 3479 and 3808 of the Congressional Globe. Illustrative of the discussion of the consideration given the Act are these remarks of Senator Casserly:

"One of the worst provisions of the bill, as it passed this body and as it went to the committee of conference, was a provision which escaped escaped the notice of nearly everyone of the minority of this body, and I verily believe of a very considerable portion of the majority of the Senators in this body. I refer to those provisions which were taken out of a bill for the enforcement of the fourteenth amendment."

"Now, is it a fit thing that legislation of that importance should go through the American Congress unknown to those members who had taken the greatest interest in informing themselves, as well as to that large body of other members whose right it was to know upon what they were voting? . . . I shall not undertake to show how far the course of the majority, in forcing the Senate bill through to a final vote at a midnight session of unusual duration, without the least public demand or exigency for such a proceeding, contributed to such a result; how far it contributed to the making, to the enacting into a law of provisions which were not supposed or understood by a considerable portion of the body to be in the bill that was before it."

Id. 3759. See also the remarks of Senators Thurman and Stewart, id. 3672, 3808. The House devoted very little attention to the Act. See id. 1812, 3503, 3853, 3871.

 [Footnote 3 ]

The depth of feeling which the lawlessness of the period evoked is reflected in the letter of Chief Justice Thomas Ruffin to his son, July 8, 1869. See 4 Hamilton, The Papers of Thomas Ruffin, 225.

 [Footnote 4 ]

In introducing the provisions, Senator Pool said,

"There are, Mr. President, various ways in which the right secured by the fifteenth amendment may be abridged by citizens in a State. If a State should undertake by positive enactment, as I have said, to abridge the right of suffrage, the courts of the country would prevent it, and I find that, in section two of the bill which has been proposed as a substitute by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate provision is made for cases where officers charged with registration or officers charged with the assessment of taxes and with making the proper entries in connection therewith, shall refuse the right to register or to pay taxes to a citizen. . . . But, sir, individuals may prevent the exercise of the right of suffrage; individuals may prevent the enjoyment of other rights which are conferred upon the citizen by the fourteenth amendment, as well as trespass upon the right conferred by the fifteenth. Not only citizens, but organizations of citizens, conspiracies, may be and are, as we are told, in some of the States formed for that purpose."

Id. 3611.

The only other pertinent remarks of the Senator are these:

"I believe that the United States has the right, and that it is an incumbent duty upon it, to go into the States to enforce the rights of the citizens against all who attempt to infringe upon those rights when they are recognized and secured by the Constitution of the country. . . ."

"Mr. President, the liberty of a citizen of the United States, the prerogatives, the rights, and the immunities of American citizenship, should not be and cannot be safely left to the mere caprice of States either in the passage of laws or in the withholding of that protection which any emergency may require. If a State, by omission, neglects to give to every citizen within its borders a free, fair, and full exercise and enjoyment of his rights, it is the duty of the United States Government to go into the State and, by its strong arm, to see that he does have the full and free enjoyment of those rights."

Id. 3613.

In both these passages, the Senator states clearly that his proposals are intended to be applicable to private persons. In neither does he indicate distinctly the nature of the rights which 6 is to protect. The phrase "rights which are conferred upon the citizen by the fourteenth amendment" does not necessarily refer to interests guaranteed by the Amendment against State action. It may be relevant only to the new federal rights created by the Amendment through conferring citizenship on persons not previously entitled to it.

 [Footnote 5 ]

The position of 6 in the statute, as well as its phraseology, indicates that it was not intended to be a companion to 17, and to punish conspiracies wherever that section prohibited the substantive offense. It is likewise clear that 6 was not intended to apply the provisions of 17 to private persons in the sense that 4 supplements 2 and 3. The location of 6 in the statute to the contrary confirms that its purpose and coverage are distinct from the other provisions of the law.

 [Footnote 6 ]

The two other decisions involving elections found the indictments wanting because what was charged was not deemed to constitute an effective interference with the exercise of a voter's federal franchise. United States v. Gardwell, 243 U. S. 476 ; United States v. Bathgate, 246 U. S. 220 .

 [Footnote 7 ]

Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678 , held that a conspiracy to drive aliens from their homes is not an offense under the statute, since it is expressly limited to interference with citizens. In three other decisions of this Court, the section was involved, but no question pertinent to the issues now before us was decided. United States v. Mason, 213 U. S. 115 ; O'Sullivan v. Felix, 233 U. S. 318 ; Pennsylvania System Federation v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 267 U. S. 203 .

 [Footnote 8 ]

It is worth noting that count 1 of the indictment in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91 , laid a charge under 51 (now 241) similar to the indictment now here for review. There was a demurrer to that indictment on the ground that 51 did not afford a legal basis for such a charge. The argument advanced by the Government to support count 1 was substantially the argument the Government now makes in this case. The demurrer was sustained, and the Government did not challenge the District Court's interpretation of 51, although the Criminal Appeals Act of 1907, 34 Stat. 1246, 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 682, now 18 U.S.C. (1950 ed.) 3731, enabled the Government to secure review of that construction here.

In a few early cases, this section was applied in lower courts to rights not arising from the relation of the victim to the Federal Government. See United States v. Hall, 26 Fed.Cas. 79; United States v. Mall, 26 Fed.Cas. 1147; Ex parte Riggins, 134 F. 404. Since in none of these decisions was it alleged that the defendants acted under color of State law, each is plainly inconsistent with subsequent decisions of this Court. They also run counter even to the arguments adduced in support of the conviction here.

|341 U.S. 70app|

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF FRANKFURTER, J.

Criminal Civil Rights Legislation: Comparative Table

of Successive Phraseology

bwm:

(Material deleted by next subsequent revision shown in brackets. Material added or substituted in revision shown in italics.)

---

Act of April 9, 1866, 14 Stat. 27 Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. Revised Statutes of 1874-1878 Criminal Code of 1909, 35 Stat. United States Code, 1926 Codifica- Title 18, United States Code, as

141, 144 1092 tion, 44 Stat. 462, now 1946 ed. revised in 1948

---

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted- SEC. 5508. If two or more per- SEC.19. If two or more persons Section 51. Conspiracy to 241. Conspiracy against

ted, That if two or more persons sons conspire to injure, oppress, conspire to injure, oppress, injure persons in exercise of rights of citizens

[shall band or] conspire [together- threaten, or intimidate any citi- threaten, or intimidate any citi- civil rights. -- If two or more ther], or go in disguise upon the zen in the free exercise or enjoy- zen in the free exercise or enjoy- persons conspire to injure, If two or more persons conspire

[public] highway, or upon the ment of any right or privilege ment of any right or privilege oppress, threaten, or intimidate to injure, oppress, threaten, or premises of another, with intent secured to him by the Constitution secured to him by the Constitution any citizen in the free exercise intimidate any citizen in the free to [violate any provision of this or laws of the United States, or or laws of the United States, or or enjoyment of any right or pri- exercise or enjoyment of any right act, or to] injure, oppress, because of his having so exercised because of his having so exercised vilege secured to him by the Con- or privilege secured to him at the discretion of the court,] office, or place of honor, profit, office, or place of honor, profit, shall, moreover, be thereafter They shall be fined not more

-- the fine not to exceed five or trust created by the Consti- or trust created by the Consti- ineligible to any office, or place than $5,000 or imprisoned not more thousand dollars, and the impri- tution or laws of the United tution or laws of the United of honor, profit, or trust created than ten years, or both.

sonment not to exceed ten years, States.[1] States. by the Constitution or laws of the

-- and shall, moreover, be there- United States].

after ineligible to, and disabled from holding, any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.[1]

SEC. 2. And be it further en- SEC. 17. And be it further en- SEC. 5510. Every person who, SEC. 20. Whoever, under color 52. Depriving citizens of 242. Deprivation of rights acted, That any person who, under acted, That any person who, under under color of any law, statute, of any law, statute, ordinance, civil rights under color of State under color of law.

color of any law, statute, ordi- color of any law, statute, ordi- ordinance, regulation, or custom, regulation, or custom, willfully laws. -- Whoever, under color of nance, regulation, or custom, nance, regulation, or custom, subjects, or causes to be sub- subjects, or causes to be subjec- any law, statute, ordinance, regu-

Whoever, under color of any shall subject, or cause to be [shall] subject, or cause to be jected, any inhabitant of any ted, any inhabitant of any State, lation, or custom, willfully sub- law, statute, ordinance, regula-subjected, any inhabitant of any subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the depri- Territory, or District to the jects, [or causes to be subject- tion, or custom, willfully sub-

State or Territory to the depri- State or Territory to the depri- vation of any rights, privileges, deprivation of any rights, privi- ed,] any inhabitant of any State, jects any inhabitant of any State, vation of any right secured or vation of any right secured or or immunities, secured or pro- leges, or immunities secured or Territory, or District to the de- Territory, or District to the protected by this act, or to dif- protected by the last preceding tected by the Constitution and protected by the Constitution and privation of any rights, privi- deprivation of any rights, privi-

ferent punishment, pains, or pe- section of this act, or to dif- laws of the United States, or to laws of the United States, or to leges, or immunities secured or leges, or immunities secured or nalties on account of such person ferent punishment, pains, or different punishments, pains, or different punishments, pains, or protected by the Constitution and protected by the Constitution or [having at any time been held in penalties on account of such per- penalties, on account of such penalties, on account of such in- laws of the United States, or to laws of the United States, or to a condition of slavery or invol- son being an alien, or by reason inhabitant being an alien, or by habitant being an alien, or by different punish- ments, pains, or different punishments, pains, or untary servitude, except as a of his color or race, than is reason of his color or race, than reason of his color, or race, than penalties, on account of such penalties, on account of such punishment for crime whereof the prescribed for the punishment of are prescribed for the punishment are prescribed for the punishment inhabitant being an alien, or by inhabitant being an alien, or by party shall have been duly con- citizens, shall be deemed guilty of citizens, shall be punished by of citizens, shall be fined not reason of his color, or race, than reason of his color, or race, than victed, or] by reason of his color of a misdemeanor, and, on conv- a fine of not more than one more than one thousand dollars, or are prescribed for the punishment are prescribed for the punishment or race, than is prescribed for iction, shall be punished by fine thousand dollars, or by impri- imprisoned not more than one year, of citizens, shall be fined not of citizens, shall be fined not the punishment of white persons, not exceeding one thousand dol- sonment not more than one year, or both. more than $1,000, or imprisoned more than $1,000 or imprisoned not shall be deemed guilty of a mis- lars, or imprisonment not exceed- or by both. not more than one year, or both. more than one year, or both.

demeanor, and, on conviction, ing one year, or both, [in the shall be punished by fine not ex- discretion of the court].[2] ceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

---

ewm:

[1] Because of the rearrangement and simplification of the clauses of . 6 in the Revision of 1874-1878, certain changes cannot conveniently be shown by brackets and italics. They are immaterial.

[2] The rights referred to in the preceding section are "to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens [and to] be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and none other." 16, 16 Stat. 144.

[Page 84 intentionally left blank]

Page 341 U. S. 85

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring.

This is one of three prosecutions of respondents Williams, Ford, Bombaci, and Perry arising out of their alleged conduct in brutally coercing confessions from certain persons suspected of theft. The first prosecution was under an indictment charging respondents and two other defendants not now before us with violation of the substantive offense and conspiracy sections of the Civil Rights Act. 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 51, 52 now 18 U.S.C. 241, 242. That trial resulted in conviction of respondent Williams and acquittal of the other five on the substantive counts; a mistrial was declared as to all defendants on the conspiracy counts.  [Footnote 2/1 ] Shortly thereafter, two new indictments were returned: one again charged the six defendants with the same conspiracy; the other charged four of them with having committed perjury during their first trial.  [Footnote 2/2 ] On the second trial for conspiracy, all were convicted, and it is these convictions of respondents that we review in the present case.

I am convinced from the records before us that the principle of res judicata should have barred the Government from trying respondents on this second indictment for conspiracy. In the first trial, the judge instructed the jury to convict on the substantive counts all defendants who either committed that crime or aided, abetted, assisted, counseled, encouraged, commanded, induced, procured or incited any other person to do so. Acquittal of the five defendants was, therefore, a final determination that they had done none of these things, or, in effect, that they had nothing to do with the commission of the substantive offense itself. The principle of res judicata, of course, precludes a relitigation of the same factual issues in any subsequent trial. Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575 . This being true, the broad scope of the facts found adversely to the Government in the first trial barred a conviction of the five defendants upon the second trial, because there is no evidence that they conspired except insofar as the unlawful agreement can be inferred from their having participated in some way in the substantive crime. Consequently, the conspiracy convictions cannot stand as to respondents Ford, Bombaci, and Perry, these three being among those previously found not guilty of the substantive charge.

Page 341 U. S. 86

Nor should the conspiracy conviction of respondent Williams stand under these circumstances. The indictment did not allege, and there was no evidence to suggest, that he conspired with anyone other than the five named defendants. As a result, when the Government was precluded by res judicata from proving the guilt of any of Williams' alleged co-conspirators, the basis of the conspiracy charged as to Williams was necessarily removed, since one person obviously cannot conspire with himself. Cf. Morrison v. California, 291 U. S. 82 , 291 U. S. 93 ; Feder v. United States, 257 F. 694; see also the cases collected in 72 A.L.R. 1180, 1186-1187; 97 A.L.R. 1312, 1313, 1316-1317.

Because, for the foregoing reasons, I believe the conspiracy convictions of respondents must fail, I find it unnecessary to determine whether 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 51, now 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed., Supp. III) 241, as applied, is too vague and uncertain in scope to be consistent with the Fifth Amendment.

Page 341 U. S. 87

 [Footnote 2/1 ]

Williams' conviction on the substantive counts is reviewed in Williams v. United States, 341 U. S. 97 , decided today.

 [Footnote 2/2 ]

The indictment charging respondents Williams, Ford, and Bombaci (and one defendant not before us in the present case) with perjury is reviewed today in United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 58 . Respondents have claimed that, because of the pending perjury charges, the defendants refrained from testifying in the present trial for conspiracy.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE REED, MR. JUSTICE BURTON, and MR. JUSTICE CLARK concur, dissenting.

Sections 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code, now 18 U.S.C. 241, 242, are companion sections designed for the protection of great rights won after the Nation's most critical internal conflict. Section 19 covers conspiracies; 20, substantive offenses. Section 19 protects the "citizen;" 20 the "inhabitant." The sanction of 19 extends to "any right or privilege secured" to the citizen "by the Constitution or laws of the United States;" the sanction of 20 to "any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States."  [Footnote 3/1 ]

Mr. Justice Rutledge, in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91 , 325 U. S. 119 , wrote that, in spite of the difference in wording of 19 and 20, there are

Page 341 U. S. 88

"no differences in the basic rights guarded. Each protects in a different way the rights and privileges secured to individuals by the Constitution."

One would indeed have to strain hard at words to find any difference of substance between "any right or privilege secured" by the Constitution or laws of the United States ( 19) and "any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States" ( 20). If 20 embraces a broader range of rights than 19, it must be because it includes "immunities" as well as "rights" and "privileges," and "protects" them as well as "secures" them. When no major difference between 19 and 20 is apparent from the words themselves, it is strange to hear it said that, though 20 extends to rights guaranteed against state action by the Fourteenth Amendment, 19 is limited to rights which the Federal Government can secure against invasion by private persons. The division of powers between State and Nation is so inherent in our republican form of government and so well established throughout our history that, if Congress had desired to draw a distinction along that line, it is hard to imagine that it would not have made its purpose clear in the language used.  [Footnote 3/2 ]

It is true that 19 and 20 have different origins. Section 20 came into the law as 2 of the Act of April 7, 1866, 14 Stat. 27, while 19 first appeared as 6 of the

Page 341 U. S. 89

Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 141. We reviewed the history of 20 in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91 , 325 U. S. 98 -100. The legislative history makes plain that 20 was an antidiscrimination measure designed to protect Negroes in their newly won rights. It was enacted before the Fourteenth Amendment became effective. But, after that date, it was reenacted as 17 of the Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 144, and in 1874, the prohibition against "the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities, secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States" was introduced. R.S. 5510. From this history there can be no doubt, as we stated in Screws v. United States, supra, at 325 U. S. 100 , that 20 is "one of the sanctions to the great rights which the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to secure." If that be true -- if "rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States," as used in 20, are not restricted to rights which the Federal Government can secure against interference by private persons -- it is difficult to understand why "any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States," as used in 19, is so restricted.

It is true that a part of the purpose of 19 (which, as I have said, originated as 6 of the Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 141) was to give sanction to the right to vote which was guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment, recently adopted. That is made plain from the congressional debates. Cong.Globe, Pt. 4, 41st Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 3607 et seq. Yet the rights which 19 protected were not confined to voting rights, and one who reads the legislative history finds no trace of a suggestion that the broadening of the language of 19 to include "any right or privilege secured" by the Constitution or laws of the United States was aimed only at those rights "secured" by the Federal Government against invasion by private persons.

Page 341 U. S. 90

The distinction now urged has not been noticed by students of the period. Thus, Flack, in Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment (1908) p. 223, wrote,

"The bill as passed by the Houses was signed by the President May 31, 1870, and so became a law, and was, therefore, the first law for the enforcement of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments."

And see Mr. Justice Roberts in Hague v. CIO, 307 U. S. 496 , 307 U. S. 510 .

If the drastic restriction now proposed for 19 had been part of the architectural scheme for the Act of May 31, 1870, it is difficult to imagine that some trace of the purpose would not have been left in the legislative history. What we find points indeed the other way. Senator Pool of North Carolina, who introduced the section from which 19 evolved, indicated that it was his purpose to extend the protection of the new provision to the Fourteenth as well as to the Fifteenth Amendment.  [Footnote 3/3 ] It has, indeed, long been assumed that 19 had a coverage broad enough to include all constitutional rights. Thus, in United States v. Mosley, 238 U. S. 383 , 238 U. S. 387 , Mr. Justice Holmes observed that 19 "dealt with Federal rights, and with all Federal rights."

Page 341 U. S. 91

Page 341 U. S. 92

There is no decision, prior to that of the Court of Appeals in this case, which is opposed to that view. Fourteenth Amendment rights have sometimes been asserted under 19 and denied by the Court. That was true in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 . But the denial had nothing to do with the issues in the present case. The Fourteenth Amendment protects the individual against state action, not against wrongs done by individuals. See Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3 ; Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U. S. 1 . The Cruikshank case, like others,  [Footnote 3/4 ] involved wrongful action by individuals who did not act for a state nor under color of state authority. As the Court in the Cruikshank case said,

"The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not, any more than the one which precedes it . . . add anything to the rights which one citizen has under the Constitution against another."

92 U.S. at pp. 92 U. S. 554 -555. There is implicit in this holding, as Mr. Justice Rutledge observed in the Screws case, supra, at 325 U. S. 125 , note 22, that wrongful action by state officials would bring the case within 19. For the Court in the Cruikshank case stated,

"The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more. The power of the national government is limited to the enforcement of this guaranty."

Section 19 has, in fact, been applied to the protection of rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. See United States v. Hall, 26 Fed.Cas. 79; United States v. Mall, 26

Page 341 U. S. 93

Fed.Cas. 1147; Ex parte Riggins, 134 F. 404, writ dism'd, 199 U. S. 547 . Those attempts which failed did so not because 19 was construed to have too narrow a scope, but because the action complained of was individual action, not state action. See, e.g., United States v. Powell, 151 F. 648, aff'd, 212 U.S. 564; Powe v. United States, 109 F.2d 147.

While it is true, as Mr. Justice Rutledge stated in the Screws case, that there is no difference between 19 and 20 so far as the "basic rights guarded" are concerned, the coverage of the two sections is not coterminous. The difference is not merely in the fact that 19 covers conspiracies and 20 substantive offenses. Section 20 extends only to those who act "under color" of law, while 19 reaches "two or more persons" who conspire to injure any citizen in the enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution, etc. The reach of 20 over deprivations of rights protected from invasion by private persons is therefore in this one respect less than that of 19. But that is no comfort to respondents in the present case. It certainly cannot be doubted that state officers, or those acting under color of state law, who conspire to wring confessions from an accused by force and violence are included in "two or more persons" within the meaning of 19. As we hold in No. 365, Williams v. United States, post, p. 341 U. S. 97 , decided this day, such an act deprives the accused of the kind of trial which the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees. He is therefore denied the enjoyment of that right within the meaning of 19.

In Screws v. United States, supra, we relieved 20 of the risk of unconstitutionality by reason of vagueness. We held that "a requirement of a specific intent to deprive a person of a federal right made definite by decision or other rule of law saves the Act from any charge of unconstitutionality on the grounds of vagueness."

325 U.S. at

Page 341 U. S. 94

103. The same analysis does like service here, as evidenced both by the construction of 19 and the charge to the jury in this case.

A conspiracy, by definition, is a criminal agreement for a specific venture. It is "a partnership in crime." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 , 310 U. S. 253 . As stated by Mr. Justice Holmes in Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U. S. 204 , 249 U. S. 209 , an "intent to accomplish an object cannot be alleged more clearly than by stating that parties conspired to accomplish it." The trial court in its charge to the jury followed the ruling in the Screws case, and gave precise application to this concept in avoidance of any claim of unconstitutionality of 19 on the grounds of vagueness. The court, after explaining to the jury what rights, enumerated in the indictment, were guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment, gave numerous charges on the element of intent. The following is typical:

"In order to convict under this indictment, it is necessary for the jury to find that the defendants had in mind the specific purpose of depriving the complaining witnesses of those rights guaranteed them under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which are enumerated in the indictment, while acting under color of the laws of the Florida."

"The proof, if any, of a general intent to do the complaining witnesses a wrong is not sufficient, but a specific intent to deprive them of a Constitutional right, as the object of the conspiracy, if any, is a burden the law casts upon the Government. In considering whether the defendants had such specific intent, you may take into consideration all the circumstances of the case in the light of the evidence as it has been developed. "

Page 341 U. S. 95

In view of the nature of the conspiracy and charge to the jury in the instant case, it would be incongruous to strike 19 down on the grounds of vagueness and yet sustain 20 as we did in the Screws case.

The defense of res judicata is based on the acquittal of five of the respondents for violation of 20 -- the substantive offense. It is argued that there is no evidence that the five conspired except insofar as the unlawful agreement can be inferred from their having participated in some way in the substantive crime. It is further argued that acquittal on the substantive counts was a determination that the five had nothing to do with the commission of the substantive offense. The conclusion therefore is that their conviction of the conspiracy entailed a relitigation, in violation of the principles of Sealfon v. United States, 332 U. S. 575 , of the factual issues involved in the prior trial.

The argument, however, is too facile for the facts.

First. The substantive crime was one of aiding and abetting. That offense has "a broader application" than conspiracy. "It makes a defendant a principal when he consciously shares in any criminal act whether or not there is a conspiracy." Nye & Nissen v. United States, 336 U. S. 613 , 336 U. S. 620 . Respondents may have conspired to do the act without actually aiding in its commission. In other words, the crimes are different.

Second. In the Sealfon case, the jury's acquittal of the first offense necessarily constituted a rejection of the only evidence presented at the second trial and upon which conviction of the record offense depended. That was not true here. The acquittals on the substantive charges by no means established that the jury rejected all the evidence against the defendants. For example, the acquittals of the substantive offense may have been on the ground that the evidence showed no giving of actual aid to Williams when he obtained the confessions by force and violence.

The evidence, though insufficient to show that the five participated in the execution of the project, could nonetheless make overwhelmingly clear that they were members of the conspiracy that conceived it.

The links that tied respondents to the conspiracy are therefore not necessarily those that the jury rejected in the earlier trial. Accordingly, the rule of Sealfon v. United States, supra, has no application.

 [Footnote 3/1 ]

Section 19 of the Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 51, provided:

"If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway, or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years, and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office, or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

Section 20 of the Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed.) 52, provided:

"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State, Territory, or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or to different punishments, pains, or penalties, on account of such inhabitant being an alien, or by reason of his color, or race, than are prescribed for the punishment of citizens, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

 [Footnote 3/2 ]

The suggestion that the general conspiracy statute, 30 of the Act of March 2, 1867, 14 Stat. 484, enacted three years before 19, was adequate to reach conspiracies under color of state law to deprive persons of Fourteenth Amendment right, and that therefore the inclusion of such rights in 19 was not necessary, bears little weight. The general conspiracy statute, as originally enacted, carried a penalty of not less than $1,000 and not more than $10,000 and imprisonment not exceeding 2 years. Section 19 has, from the beginning, carried a more severe penalty -- not more than $5,000 and imprisonment not to exceed 10 years. Moreover, 19, at the time of its enactment, carried a further penalty: the persons convicted were disabled from holding "any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States." Act of May 31, 1870, 6, 16 Stat. 141. The penalty of the general conspiracy statute has only recently been increased. See 18 U.S.C. (1946 ed., Supp. III) 371, reviser's note.

 [Footnote 3/3 ]

After discussing the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments, he said,

"I believe that we have a perfect right under the Constitution of the United States, not only under these three amendments, but under the general scope and features and spirit of the Constitution itself, to go into any of these States for the purpose of protecting and securing liberty. I admit that, when you go there for the purpose of restraining liberty, you can go only under delegated powers in express terms; but to go into the States for the purpose of securing and protecting the liberty of the citizen and the rights and immunities of American citizenship is in accordance with the spirit and whole object of the formation of the Union and the national Government."

"There are, Mr. President, various ways in which the right secured by the fifteenth amendment may be abridged by citizens in a State. . . . I believe the language of the Senate bill is sufficiently large and comprehensive to embrace any other class of officers that might be charged with any act that was necessary to enable a citizen to perform any prerequisite to voting. But, sir, individuals may prevent the exercise of the right of suffrage; individuals may prevent the enjoyment of other rights which are conferred upon the citizen by the Fourteenth Amendment, as well as trespass upon the right conferred by the Fifteenth. Not only citizens, but organizations of citizens, conspiracies, may be and are, as we are told, in some of the States formed for that purpose. I see in the fourth section of the Senate bill a provision for cases where citizens by threats, intimidation, bribery, or otherwise prevent, delay, or hinder the exercise of this right; but there is nothing here that strikes at organizations of individuals at conspiracies for that purpose. . . ."

" * * * *"

"That the United States Government has the right to go into the States and enforce the Fourteenth and the Fifteenth Amendments is, in my judgment, perfectly clear, by appropriate legislation that shall bear upon individuals. I cannot see that it would be possible for appropriate legislation to be resorted to except as applicable to individuals who violate or attempt to violate these provisions. Certainly we cannot legislate here against States. As I said a few moments ago, it is upon individuals that we must press our legislation. It matters not whether those individuals be officers or whether they are acting upon their own responsibility; whether they are acting singly or in organizations. If there is to be appropriate legislation at all, it must be that which applies to individuals. . . ."

" * * * *"

"Mr. President, the liberty of a citizen of the United States, the prerogatives, the rights, and immunities of American citizenship, should not be and cannot be safely left to the mere caprice of States either in the passage of laws or in the withholding of that protection which any emergency may require. If a State, by omission, neglects to give to every citizen within its borders a free, fair, and full exercise and enjoyment of his rights, it is the duty of the United States Government to go into the State, and, by its strong arm, to see that he does have the full and free enjoyment of those rights."

Cong.Globe, 41st Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 3611, 3613.

 [Footnote 3/4 ]

See Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1 , 203 U. S. 14 ; United States v. Powell, 151 F. 648, aff'd, 212 U.S. 5643; United States v. Wheeler, 254 U. S. 281 , 254 U. S. 298 .

SooperKanoon - India's Premier Online Legal Search - sooperkanoon.com